Woman to Receive No Mercy if Trapped in Man Hunt.

Slain Desperado's Aids Elude Search

Hundreds of Federal Agents and Police Cover Roads.

Chicago, Nov. 29 (AP).—Diminutive Helen Gillis tonight unofficially became the Nation's first woman public enemy.

Hundreds of Federal agents, police, sheriffs and their deputies scoured highways and byways tonight to ferret out the widow of "Baby Face" Nelson, killer of three Federal agents, who fell mortally wounded by bullets from guns of two dying agents.

With her in the furtive dash away from authorities was believed to be John Hamilton, last lieutenant of the crime-crazed Dillinger mob.

No Mercy Awaits Woman.

And should officialdom meet the desperate duo, gunfire will not be withheld. The mercy Inspector Samuel P. Cowley and Federal Agent Herman E. Hollis showed the woman believed to be Mrs. Gillis will not be repeated. It was that mercy, apparently that cost them their lives Tuesday.

Inspector H. H. Clegg, who flew here from Washington to assist Melvin H. Purvis, head of the local bureau of investigation of the Department of Justice, commented tersely:

"We want her."

No gun girl was the petite, 94-pound Helen Wawrzyniak when she married Lester M. Gillis, who later became George (Baby Face) Nelson. She was born and reared on Chicago's Northwest Side.

Mother of Two Children.

She is the mother of two children, Arelen, 4, now at the home of Nelson's mother, Mrs. Mary Gillis, 65, and Ronald, 5, reported to be at the home of one of Nelson's sisters in Bremerton, Wash.

It was understood that her bobbed hair has been made blond and it was expected, that like her husband and others of the Dillinger mob, she has sought to obliterate her fingerprints. The Government's official description lists her as 5 feet 2, fair and blue of eyes. She had a mole on her left wrist, but it is likely that has been removed to make identification difficult.

Hamilton Is "Wanted."

Indication that the Government is convinced that Hamilton is not dead as reported from time to time, came from Clegg.

"We want John Hamilton," he said, but refused further comment.

Momentary excitement flurried through Chicago's Loop today when police apprehended a man and a woman at the Union Bus Station. Reports spread quickly that the pair—Hamilton and Mrs. Gillis—were under arrest. Mystery surrounded the arrests and it was not until tonight that it was learned the man and woman were held for questioning concerning a Los Angeles bank robbery.

Deputy Coroner John J. Butler, after a conference with Federal authorities, said he was certain Mrs. Gillis was not in custody. He added that Government men would testify tomorrow when the inquest into Nelson's death convened.

Clegg was expected to leave for Des Moines late tonight to be present as a pallbearer at the funeral for Hollis. Cowley will be buried at Salt Lake City.

Cowley and Hollis, en route to Nelson's supposed hideout, were shot down by the murderous trigger man of the Dillinger mob. They dropped with their weapons blazing and Nelson was fatally wounded. His body was found yesterday in a ditch on the northern fringe of Chicago.

Reports persisted that when the agents found Nelson's fingerprints Wednesday on the Government car in which his two companions carried him away after the battle, they also found fingerprints identifying his aids.

Clegg would not admit this today.

Nelson Hideout Sought.

Nelson's hideout has not been found. When Cowley and Hollis brought him to bay Tuesday, and forced the fierce machine gun battle which killed three of them, the little gangster was en route to the Fox Lane region of northern Illinois presumably to a cabin.

Canned goods in Nelson's car, a light, fast sedan, indicated the gangster, his wife and his aid hoped to hide for the winter in that haven. Today Sheriff Lester Tiffany, of Lake County (Ill.), continued a systematic search of abandoned summer cottages there.

Mrs. J. M. Carey Dies; U. S. Senator's Mother

Cheyenne, Wyo., Nov. 29 (AP). Mrs. J. M. Carey, widow of Gov. Carey, of Wyoming, and mother of Senator Robert D. Carey, died at her home here today. She was 78.

Mrs. Carey was born in Dubuque, Iowa, in 1856, and was a pioneer settler in Wyoming. She had been ill many months.

Mother Quits Capital, Still Seeking Gloria

(Associated Press.)

Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt turned back to New York last night after a Thanksgiving week respite, ready and determined to take up again her thus-far losing court battle for custody of her daughter, Gloria.

She declared herself determined to keep up the fight until she won.

During her three days in the Capital, Mrs. Vanderbilt kept fairly close to her announced program of "rest and quiet," but her friends here succeeded in coaxing her out to several quiet parties and even a luncheon in the "cocktail lounge" of her hotel.

Lunching with her on this semi-public occasion were Lady Willmott Lewis, wife of the London Times correspondent; Mrs. H. H. Sims, wife of the attache of the British Embassy; Mrs. William Doeller, Mrs. Eldridge E. Jordan, at whose home her sister, Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, is staying, and Mrs. Thaw.

A few close friends came to see her and were admitted to her suite. She received a number of bouquets from sympathizers. Her deluge of letters from all parts of the country continued, most of them expressing the opinion that "a mother has best right to her child."

Mrs. Vanderbilt dined quietly with Mrs. Sims one night and with Mrs. Jordan another.

Invitations were pressed upon her for the Thanksgiving holiday. Separated from her child, partially

Clew in Death Of Girls Found In California

Family Is Missing as Car in Case Is Traced to Pacific Coast.

Carlisle, Pa., Nov. 29 (AP).—News from California of the hasty departure of Elmo J. Noakes, his three little daughters and his housekeeper niece, gave new hope tonight to investigators baffled by the tragic riddle of Pennsylvania's "Babes in the Wood" deaths.

"I wouldn't be a bit surprised," said Lieut. H. E. McElroy, of the possibility that the five bodies found in separate sections of this State Saturday night be those of the Roseville (Calif.) fruit shipping company employe and his family.

An automobile serial number, taken from the abandoned motor car in which, it is believed, the three little girls and the couple found slain traveled through Pennsylvania, provided the clew.

California police said the car was sold at Sacramento on November 10 to Noakes, who soon afterward left Roseville without collecting two weeks' pay due him. The West Coast officers said Noakes' daughters, Cordelia, 8; Dewilla, 10, and Norma, 12, and his niece, Winnie Pierce, 19, went with him.

Noakes, a widower, left other evidence of hasty departure, Roseville police said.

Telegraphed descriptions of Noakes and the children tallied with the bodies found in this State, Lieut. McElroy said. He added that the woman found shot to death with the man at a lonely railroad station at Duncansville, Pa., "could be Miss Pierce."

The children's bodies were discovered on a mountainside near

Trade Leaders Join to Press Job Insurance

Group Plans to Come Here to Aid President in Program.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—A group of leading industrialists is clustering forces to align itself with Administration officials during the coming session of Congress in shaping an unemployment insurance program, it was learned tonight.

Their primary purpose, one of the group disclosed, is to cooperate in developing a program based on sound principles, with employers taking the lead. Another vital consideration, however, was reported to be that jockeying in congressional committees and on the floor might produce a measure detrimental to business interests.

These business executives, contending that unemployment insurance could best be handled through an understanding between employer and employe, have been studying the question intensively for the past week, reviewing ground covered in previous analyses.

With this information and their own ideas on the subject, they were represented as ready to go to Washington and take the initiative in the program, working out their plan under principles of social relief laid down by President Roosevelt.

One program advanced proposed allowing certain industries to establish their own plans, to administer them separately and to pay their own way, but it was argued that industries with low unemployment ratios would prefer to set up their own reserves and force lines with high unemployment rates to rely on State funds when their own reserves run low.

Experts also are seeking to devise a check against an industry or State with high seasonal unemployment from taking reserves built up by States or industries in which the working ratio is more stable.

Administration costs have presented another problem to the investigators. Figures on England's experience showed that from 8.4 to 23 per cent of the total paid went in for expenses.

One authority declared that five years' experience would be required to solve the major questions involved in any program.

Splendor of Nuptial Events Dazzles the Empire; Merrymakers Seize London for Biggest Function Since Coronation.

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—Princess Marina, of Greece, became the bride today of the Duke of Kent, King George's youngest son, in the most goregous pageant London has witnessed in many years.

A half million persons who packed this staid old city to the chimney-tops roared cheer after cheer as the young couple, parading in glittering procession from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey and back, plighted their troth in two separate ceremonies.

Feverish, happy excitement, not at all blighted by early-morning rain, fog and mist, gripped the capital from the moment Marina, waking early, peeped out between the curtains of her Buckingham Palace suite until shouting throngs saw the newly-weds off for their country honeymoon.

The mood of merry-making still held the city tonight and the spirit of carnival reigned at all London's palaces of amusement as the royal honeymooners sought seclusion at the Earl of Dudley's country home, Himley Hall.

Event Recalls Coronation.

It was the city's biggest event since, perhaps, the coronation of King George 25 years ago. Londoners, their numbers swelled by thousands from the provinces, made the most of it.

Two colorful ceremonies, each steeped in centuries of tradition, united the pair, whose romance, born at the country estate of Prince Paul, of Yugoslavia, in the beautiful Slovenian Alps, thrilled England's charwomen and countesses alike.

The first ceremony was the symbolical and impressive service of the Church of England, carried out before the crowned heads and other notables of England and the Continent in the Old World setting of Westminster Abbey, the nation's shrine.

Beneath the high windows and the roomy arches of the Abbey, where sleep the nation's kings and queens and other mortals, Kent and Marina spoke their vows before the august Archbishop of Canterbury. The most imposing gathering of many years, its splendor shining softly under candlelight, watched in impressive silence.

Greek Ceremony Held.

The second service was the 1,100-year-old rite of the Greek Orthodox Church, in the white and gold private chapel of Buckingham Palace before members of the couple's immediate families.

Thousands stayed up all night to be on hand to witness the start of the day's pageantry and ceremonials, the three processions which took the bridal pair, the King and

Children Dine As Roosevelt Slices Turkey

12 Youngsters Eat With President; 2 Buildings Are Dedicated.

(Post Staff Writer).

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 29. Seated at the head table of a long dining hall, surrounded by the youngest patients of this infantile paralysis colony, President Roosevelt tonight led the Nation in celebration in Thanksgiving.

It was the annual founder's day banquet of the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation, which the President himself originated when he was a convalescent here among the rolling hills of west Georgia.

As has been his custom for years, he carved expertly from a 40-pound turkey and passed heaping slices to the smallest children, a dozen of whom had drawn lots to sit at the President's table.

In the festivities that followed, including music, speech-making and lantern slides of the colony,

Girl Found in Bathtub Clad in Fiery Towels

Denton, Tex., Nov. 29 (AP).—Miss Helen Gardner, junior student at North Texas State Teachers College, was found probably fatally burned today in the bathroom of the home of Mrs. M. C. Henry, where she boarded.

Mrs. Henry said the girl was lying in a bathtub with flaming towels over her body. The towels appeared to have been soaked in some inflammable fluid and Miss Gardner was unclothed, Mrs. Henry said.

Pared Budget In '35 Is Aim Of Buchanan

Proposes Gradual Scaling Down of Emergency Expenditures.

By Robert C. Albright.

A scaling down of the Administration's emergency budget, beginning in a small way this year, and continuing in gradual steps each year as business recovers, yesterday was proposed by Representative James P. Buchanan, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

Buchanan made clear he is not attempting to forecast the volume of spending that will be needed in 1935 recovery planning. His statement outlined what his committee seeks to accomplish if trade improvement continues and the relief burden permits.

Although 1935 budget estimates for independent offices were submitted to the committee yesterday, and preliminary House hearings will open at the Capitol Tuesday, the size of both budgets, regular and extraordinary, still hangs in the balance. In large measure, their scope will be determined at conferences at Warm Springs this week.

"Economy Bloc" Restless.

Economy-minded members of the House, who already have pared regular departmental expenses down to what many think is an irreducible minimum, are restless to dig the pruning knife deep into emergency billions before they take on the nature of permanent outlays.

Lean, scrupulous Representative Buchanan "hopes" a start can be made next year, but admits that the recovery pendulum, unless recovery checks it, may cut a wide swath through his plans.

In other quarters it was learned that the $5,000,000,000 housing program proposed by Public Works Administrator Ickes is one of the

Ulm Nears Vancouver For Hop Over Pacific

Oakland, Calif., Nov. 29 (AP).—Charles T. P. Ulm, flier who plans to backtrack the Kingsford-Smith air trail to Australia, swooped down here today from Los Angeles, en route to Vancouver, B. C.

His transpacific flight probably will start from Vancouver, he said. With him were Co-pilot George M. Littlejohn and Radio Operator John Skilling. The time for the flight has not been set, but Ulm expects to leave for Vancouver tomorrow.

Alabama, Pitt and Colgate Win; G. W. Overcomes Oklahoma, 3 to 0

Button, button, who's got the Rose Bowl button? Three outstanding teams, Alabama, Pitt and Colgate played this Thanksgiving game, and while all won their individual contests, the question of who's to play Stanford in Pasadena on New Year's Day is still unanswered. Here's what happened on the Nation's holiday gridirons:

Alabama's Crimson Tide smeared an apparently helpless Vanderbilt team, 34 to 0, and ended its season undefeated, untied, and champion of the Southeastern Conference. Pitt, defeated only once, and then by Minnesota's invincibles, showed plenty of strength in overwhelmingly Carnegie Tech, 20 to 0. And Colgate, conquered only by Ohio State, encountered unexpected opposition before overcoming Brown, 20 to 13. Last night, it looked as if the Rose Bowl sun would shine on Alabama.

Harry Deming's talented toe gave George Washington a field goal victory over Oklahoma, 3 to 0, in a mud-soaked game at Griffith Stadium. Maryland's Terrapins outclassed Johns Hopkins, 19 to 0, at Baltimore. North Carolina bowled over Virginia, 25 to 6. Virginia Poly won from Virginia Military, 13 to 0; Tennessee bested Kentucky, 19 to 0; Washington and Lee overcame South Carolina, 14 to 7, and Richmond beat William and Mary, 6 to 0.

Pop Warner's undefeated Temple tempest was bottled up by Bucknell in a surprising scoreless tie. Pennsylvania outscored Cornell, 23 to 13, in their traditional battle, and Fordham trampled over N. Y. U., 34 to 13. Kansas State became Big Six Conference titleholders by whipping Nebraska, 19 to 7, and Texas upset Texas A. and M., 13 to 0.

And in the Far West, St. Mary's Gaels scored twice in the fourth quarter to set back Oregon, 13 to 7, while U. C. L. A. drubbed Loyola of Los Angeles.

More Members of Congress Oppose Job Rider Ousting 900

Almost unanimous approval of the plan to repeal the McKellar rider to the emergency appropriation bill under which approximately 900 Treasury Department investigators lose their jobs today is expressed in replies thus far received to The Post questionnaire on the subject.

Endeavoring to protect the jobs of these employes, all of whom have civil service rating, The Post has sent letters to all members of Congress asking their attitude toward repeal of the rider and reinstatement of the employes.

M. M. Logan (Democrat), Kentucky.

Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota.

Frederick Van Nuys (Democrat), Indiana.

W. Warren Barbour (Republican), New Jersey.

The letters included a space in which the recipient could check either "yes" or "no" as to his attitude toward repeal of the rider. Some members of Congress added comment. "Should be eliminated and men restored," Senator Logan commented.

Senator Jesse H. Metcalf (Republican), Rhode Island, was absent on a vacation, but his secretary wrote:

"As the Senator has already expressed his opinion, I feel at liberty to advise you that he is very much opposed to the amendment which affects certain employes of

Louisiana Students May Defy Huey With Independent Paper

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 29 (AP).—Reveille went unanswered at Louisiana State University today and there were prospects that students may publish and finance an independent newspaper to escape Senator Huey Long's dictatorship over the university press.

The editorial staff of the Reveille—seven students—had resigned rather than submit the columns of the paper to a faculty censorship invoked to prevent criticism of Long.

The Senator himself failed to answer Reveille. He was nowhere in the front ranks of the controversy raging among students of the school of journalism who demanded they be allowed freedom of speech and print or they would permanently desert the college publication.

Samuel A. Montague, president of the journalism students, and one of 26 suspended for protesting the "gag" on the paper, said he had been told by Dr. J. M. Smith, president of the university, that he would have no objection if the students published an independent newspaper.

The Thanksgiving holidays threw a quietus over a ruffled campus situation which followed upon the closing of the paper and a strike of the more than 400 students of the journalism school.

Dr. Smith also issued an ultimatum. He publicly told the board of supervisors of the college, of which Senator Long is one, that the board either would back him up in his actions to preserve a "principle" in the suspensions or the university could "get another president."

Tokyo Confirms Intent to Scrap Navy Ratio Pact

Statement Called Knell for Parley

Japan, However, to Seek Slash in Sea Forces, Minister Says.

Tokyo (Friday), Nov. 30 (U.P.).—Foreign Minister Koki Hirota today publicly confirmed the determination of the Japanese government to denounce the Washington naval limitation agreements.

In a blunt speech before a special session of the imperial diet—the Teikoku Jikai—the foreign minister asserted that Japan proposes abolition of the ratio principle of naval strength between herself, Britain and the United States and "establishment of a common upper limit for the powers concerned."

The foreign minister's address—his annual report to Parliament—was interpreted as finally closing the door to any possible chance of success for the preliminary naval conversations now being held in London.

Emperor Approves Text.

Text of the address was approved by Emperor Hirohito and the cabinet before it was delivered. An official English translation also was supplied chiefs of foreign missions in Tokyo, including United States Ambassador Joseph C. Grew.

While the foreign minister did not comment on the Japanese naval proposals in his speech, it was known that he feels they have no chance of success and fears the possibility of unbridled naval competition when the Washington limitation agreements expire.

Hirota described the naval conversations in London as touching "upon matters of extreme importance."

"In these negotiations," he said, "the Japanese government, while aiming at Japan's possession of a naval force fully adequate for security of her national defense, are endeavoring to establish firmly the principle of nonmenace and nonaggression. It is according to this principle that Japan proposes abolition of the ratio principle heretofore in force and establishment of a common upper limit for the powers concerned.

Says Navy Cut Desired.

"In consonance with the spirit of disarmament we desire to bring about thorough and drastic naval reduction and to lighten thereby the tax burden of nations in the future. To that end we desire to bring down this common upper limit to the lowest possible level and, at the same time, through drastic reduction and limitation of offensive arms and proper adjustment in defense arms, to render it difficult for any power to attack another, but easy to defend itself.

"Our delegates (in London) are continuing their efforts toward realization of our plan based on the above policy and at the same time toward conclusion of a new and reasonable treaty. It is hoped that Britain, the United States and other powers concerned will see the equity and justice of our claim and that a new naval pact will be brought into being to insure and promote world peace."

Hirota believed that since his last appearance before Parliament Japan's relations with Europe, America and China "have grown increasingly cordial because a better understanding now prevails among the powers regarding Japan's position in the Far East."

The foreign minister rejoiced that Manchukuo has made rapid strides in every branch of national administration and laid a lasting foundation for the country by the establishment of the imperial regime in March last—when Emperor Kang Teh was enthroned in Hsinking.

Hirota saw Russo-Japanese relations as greatly improved by a partial solution of the question of the Chinese Eastern Railway. He was confident all details of the plan for purchase of the line from Russia by Manchukuo will be worked out peacefully.

Typhoon Rages In Philippines; Losses Heavy

Manila, Nov. 29 (AP).—Another swath of devastation was cut through the east central Philippines tonight by a typhoon described as one of the worst in the history of that area.

A wind velocity of 125 miles an hour was reported in Leyte Province by its governor, Vicente de la Cruz. Enormous damage and probable loss of life were reported in that area. The governor estimated the damage in his province would be $500,000.

Apparently the storm was the most violent of the four that have visited that general area in the last six weeks. The last typhoon, November 15, killed about 140 persons and caused widespread destruction in provinces just north of Leyte. At that time the wind reached 80 miles an hour.

The storm center seemed to be passing to the south of Manila, but warning signals were displayed here as a precaution.

Twelve Red Cross relief workers were ordered to leave for Leyte tomorrow on the revenue cutter Banahaw.

First reports of the toll included the death of one man and the destruction of 300 houses in Tacloban, capital of Leyte. Outlying areas were yet to be heard from.

Salamanca Out, Sorzano Takes Bolivian Helm

La Paz, Bolivia, Nov. 29 (AP).—President Daniel Salamanca resigned today, to the confusion of his cabinet, and Vice President Jose Luis Tejada Sorzano took over the office.

Twenty-four hours before the President's resignation was officially presented, Sorzano already was exercising the powers of that office by virtue of his decree yesterday in which he announced Salamanca had gone to the Chaco Boreal, leaving affairs of state that needed immediate attention.

(Dispatches from Buenos Aires and Santiago, Chile, as well as reports received in Washington indicated Salamanca had been made prisoner by Bolivian troops when he attempted to change commanders in chief.)

Text of Resignation.

"To the Nation: Because of good and sufficient reasons which weigh upon my spirit I definitely resign, and leave the office of constitutional President of the republic."

The resignation of Salamanca's cabinet was expected shortly. Last night and early today, before the fact the President had quit his office was confirmed, Foreign Minister David Alvestegui declared the ministers "must remain in their posts until the resignation becomes official."

Salamanca's Plans.

Army officials said tonight that Salamanca would go to Cocha Bamba to join his family, after his visit to Villamontes, Bolivian army base in the Chaco Boreal, from

FHA to Insure Private Capital InHousingPlan

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

In an apparent effort to stimulate the interest of private capital in low-cost housing projects, Federal Housing Administrator James A. Moffett yesterday announced his agency would insure mortgages on such projects up to the full value of the buildings, exclusive of the land which must be unencumbered.

The mortgage insurance which Mr. Moffett outlined yesterday is offered for the benefit of private limited dividend corporations or municipal corporate bodies formed for the purpose of providing housing for persons of low income.

Under the regulations prescribed by Mr. Moffett such corporations to be eligible for the Federal insurance must limit their profits and carry out their projects along lines laid down by the administrator with a view to providing low-cost but livable homes in desirable surroundings and reasonably close to diversified industries.

Excessive Costs Barred.

As an example of the regulations laid down by the FHA Mr. Moffett explained that "excessive prices for land, the test being value for housing purposes, is banned as is excessive cost per room and the total cost of a property must not be in excess of its value based on the capitalization of prospective income."

Mr. Moffett believes that private capital is ready to assume the task of supplying low-cost homes and that the Government through the PWA should confine its activities to low-cost housing in connection with slum clearance, which is universally regarded as needing a subsidy, and homestead subsistence projects.

The extent to which private capital takes advantage of the insurance offered by FHA and undertakes the low-cost housing job will in large part determine the extent to which the Roosevelt Administration will go in low-cost housing projects publicly financed.

This was the basis of the controversy last week between Mr. Moffett and Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, who is in charge of the PWA. Mr. Ickes at the time said the Government could not wait until private capital made up its mind to assume the task and that anyway the Government could do the job cheaper. On that basis, such competition was justified, he added.

Roosevelt Steps In.

Since then President Roosevelt has taken charge of the controversy and the two officials dropped their fight. The President pointed out his Administration is committed to promoting low-cost housing for those with slim pockets, but he did not indicate how much Federal funds should be spent directly in erecting low-cost homes.

Mr. Moffett, after pointing out "long-time mortgage loans on low-cost housing projects up to the full value of the buildings, exclusive of the land, which must be unencumbered, may be insured" under the national housing act, explained that "capitalization of low-cost projects is limited to the actual investment by the stockholders."

"On this," he added, "they may receive regular annual dividends not to exceed 6 per cent and special disbursements not to exceed 2½ per cent a year, provided an amount equal to that paid in such special disbursements is returned to the tenants in the form of rebates or rent.

"Earnings in excess of regular 6 per cent dividends and 2½ per cent special disbursements to stockholders and tenants must, under the rules governing insured mortgages, be allowed to accumulate for distribution to the tenants at such times and in such amounts as the administrator in his discretion shall determine."

None of the capital stock of such low-cost housing corporations may be retired during the lifetime of the mortgages, which may run for 20 years.

Buffalo Meet Promises Game To Crow Indians

Crow Agency, Mont., Nov. 29 (AP). To the Crow Indians of Southeastern Montana and Northeastern Wyoming this Thanksgiving Day bore promise that their hunting grounds, once populous with wild game, may furnish their future Thanksgiving dinners.

Out of neighboring Yellowstone Park there moved the first consignment of 50 buffalo cows and four bulls given to the tribe by the Government from the great bison herd of the national park.

The buffalo from Yellowstone are the nucleus for what Chief Yellowtail, agency superintendent, hopes some day will be a great herd, providing food and hides for his people. Yellowtail plans later to stock the reservation with moose and wild turkey.

Reception Group Named For D. C. Crime Parley

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings yesterday named a group of prominent Washingtonians to serve as the reception committee for his conference on crime, which will convene here December 10. The meeting will attract criminologists, sociologists, lawyers and members of the judiciary here from all parts of the Nation.

Patrick J. Hurley, former Secretary of War, will act as chairman of the group. Other members named were District Commissioner George E. Allen, Raymond T. Baker, Judge Fay Bentley, Ralph O. Cornell, Mrs. Edward P. Costigan, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Mrs. Russell William Magna, Eugene Meyer, Frank B. Noyes, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson and Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of the District Supreme Court.

Between You and Me

Vote on Cotton Control Act, December 14, Brings Electioneering From Both Sides.

By Raymond Clapper

An election unique in American history will be held throughout the South on December 14. On that day cotton farmers will vote on the question of whether the Bankhead act for compulsory cotton control shall be continued another year.

About 8,000 polling places will be set up in the cotton-growing States. Polls will be open from 8 a. m. until 6 p. m. This is one time—shades of Senator Lodge and the Force bill—that Negroes in the South will vote, for many of them are cotton growers. Tenants and share-croppers, as well as plantation owners, get a vote this time.

The secret ballot is provided for. As each ballot is given out, the cotton voter will be handed a printed statement of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, explaining the crop-control program impartially for the information of reading voters.

It is an experiment in economic democracy of a new brand, in that it brings the voter into direct play upon the executive branch of the Government without the intervention of the legislative arm.

There has been much electioneering both ways in preparation for this vote by cotton growers as to whether they want the Government to continue its forcible restriction of their production.

Curiously, what worries officials here is not opposition to regimentation because they detect little sign of serious feeling about that. Cotton growers are kicking over details of administration, but are not much alarmed apparently over the principle of compulsory control.

A more widespread fear is that continued restriction of production will cut off foreign markets. This fear, as officials here assess the situation, is inspired more by exporters of cotton who naturally want large volume. The average grower, they say, would rather raise less cotton at good prices than more cotton at starvation prices.

While Department of Agriculture officials minimize the danger of loss of foreign markets and deny that high prices on American cotton have much to do with declines in exports, nevertheless in some Administration quarters there is genuine fear of permanently losing foreign outlets which once took 60 per cent of American cotton. Some 1,500,000 Southern families depended upon that export for a livelihood.

Considerable anxiety has been caused by the recent tailspin in cotton exports. Until this year they held up very well, despite the depression, comparing favorably with the boom years in the twenties. But when the new crop season opened August 1, exports dropped to less than half of what they were for August last year. September was almost as bad.

* * * *

Numerous reasons for this are suggested, including high prices, foreign exchange difficulties, policies of self-sufficiency by other countries leading to use of substitutes and expansion of acreage in other cotton-growing regions of the world. Every expert has his favorite reason.

Italy is using wood fiber as a cotton substitute. Samples of cloth made from it have been received by the Department of Agriculture.

China has a commission for rationalization of the cotton industry at work promoting better use of cotton seeds, establishment of cooperation among cotton growers and development of better marketing methods. Cotton weaving and spinning employs more labor than any other industry in China. She is now aiming to increase her supply of raw cotton, having an abundance of field labor and much available acreage suitable for growing. Transportation from inland isolated areas is the greatest obstacle.

India has more acreage in cotton than all of the United States, omitting Texas, and is increasing it.

Last year foreign production hit an all-time high.

* * * *

The difficulty is that cheap cotton alone would not solve the situation.

"Cotton producers," says Secretary Wallace, "should consider the probable social cost involved in an international price competition for foreign markets. Starvation prices and low income from cotton have not always in the past prevented increases in foreign cotton production. Foreign producing countries increased cotton production, even when American cotton was selling at from 5 to 6 cents per pound."

It is a problem involving the standard of living of several million people, a question of whether they shall be compelled to live like animals, or enjoy the comforts of the average American citizen.

* * * *

If there was any way of introducing machinery into cotton production, the problem might be simpler. For instance, a manufacturer who depends largely on machinery can stand higher labor costs without the price of his product being noticeably affected. It is said that 150 persons supply the world markets with all of the Jello-O that is consumed. World consumption of Maxwell House coffee, it is said, is supplied by some 325 persons. Two persons turn out the entire tennis ball supply of one large sports goods manufacturer. Put them in a cotton field and they couldn't pick a bale in a day.

After TVA officials heard Mr. Roosevelt's power speech at Tupelo, Miss., when he promised that the experiment there would spread throughout the country, one of them in his jubilation remarked:

"If I had my choice between any kingdom on earth and that speech, I'd take the speech."

Why not?

Before Mr. Roosevelt gets through they will rule a domain so big that you could put most of the surviving crowns of Europe in it and they would still have room in which to totter.

$80,650,000 Lent to Railroad Is PWA's Largest Allotment

Pennsylvania Outlay Has Helped Many to Return to Work.

PWA yesterday measured the effect of its billions in terms of accomplishments under its biggest single allotment for private work—$80,650,000 to the Pennsylvania Railroad.

With the aid of Public Works funds, the summation said, the railway has been able to supply the equivalent of an hour's work for 14,069,599 men to furloughed track and shop men called back to their jobs. They have been paid $8,252,836.

In addition, PWA said, material orders aggregating $29,120,543 were stimulating the heavy goods industries and creating an even greater volume of indirect employment.

Besides helping the Pennsylvania electrify its line between New York and Washington, PWA funds are being expended for 7,000 freight cars and 25 electric locomotives, and for laying 100,000 tons of new rails.

14 More U. S. Planes Bought by Dutch Line

Paris, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—The KLM—Royal Dutch Airline—today announced it had ordered 14 more American Douglas bimotored planes for service to the Netherlands East Indies. The order came after the KLM had tested planes of all nations. The ships will be used in the air mail service on the 9,000-mile run to the Far East.

The officials were pleased with the fact two Dutch airmen won the handicap section of the recent England-Australia air race in a Douglas commercial plane.

Paris, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—The Prince of Asturias, eldest son of former King Alfonso XIII, of Spain, formally denied today reports of divorce proceedings against his Cuban wife. He said his wife, who is on her way to Havana, left Paris because of "family business" and would return next May.

Arizona Bombs Scare Japanese

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 29 (AP). Bombs hurled by night raiders in a new surge of anti-alien sentiment in Arizona's rich Salt River Valley sent State and county authorities into that area tonight for an intensified investigation. Two bombs were hurled by the raiders last night. Both were directed at farms operated by Japanese.

One of the missiles exploded in the yard of Jim Takesuye, 7 miles northwest of Phoenix. It tore off screening from around the porch, ripped boards from the gable of the house and shattered a window. Three children in the house were not hurt. The other bomb did not explode.

Mystery Death Letter Fails to Stir Officials

Los Angeles, Nov. 29 (AP).—A mysterious letter asking the county grand jury to investigate the death of Jerry Jarnegin, husband of Irene Franklin, musical comedy actress, tonight failed to arouse much official curiosity.

Dr. John P. Buckley, jury foreman, indicated the information in the letter purporting to cast doubt on the conclusion that the actor-song writer killed himself did not carry sufficient weight to warrant delving into the case.

Jobless Total 550,000 More, Green Asserts

A. F. L. Chief Blames Rise in Unemployment to Slack Fall Trade.

The United States is entering the winter of 1934 with 550,000 more unemployed than it had at the corresponding time last year, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared last night in a formal statement.

The federation estimates, he said, show that 10,671,000 are without jobs in industry, as of October, whereas there were 10,122,000 idle last year.

"Business activity in October this year was 2.6 per cent below last year," he added, "and this accounts partly for the increase in unemployment."

Green's figures are expected to arouse another controversy similar to that which developed between the American Federation of Labor and the United States Chamber of Commerce last August.

Last Estimates Varied.

At that time the chamber insisted that less than 7,000,000 were without jobs, while the federation estimated that 10,312,000 were on the unemployed list.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins has persistently declined to enter the controversy on the ground that neither the Labor Department nor any Governmental agency keeps check on the unemployed.

Green ascribed the increase in unemployment "partly * * * to the fact that the effort to increase employment in industry is not so general as it was at this time last year.

"The serious implications of this increase in unemployment can not be overemphasized," he said. "Relief need this winter is already higher than it was last year.

Relief Rolls Soar 20 Per Cent.

"Reports from urban areas show that in October, 1934, the number on relief rolls was 30 per cent greater than in October, 1933. In August, the latest month for which we have complete figures for relief in the country as a whole, there were 900,000 more cases or nearly 3,000,000 more persons on relief rolls than in August last year, an increase of 20 per cent.

"The total financial obligaton for relief had increased from $61,470,000 to $149,426,000, or more than doubled. This means that, in addition to the increase in unemployment, those who have been unemployed for a long time have exhausted their resources; those who once had savings are now wholly dependent on relief.

"Food prices have increased and the cost of relief is greater; also relief in some cases is more adequate."

Statement Precedes Parley.

The labor statement came on the eve of a conference between President Roosevelt and Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, at Warm Springs, Ga., on the problem of caring for the unemployed throughout the winter.

A gigantic work relief program that will give temporary jobs to all employable relief recipients is expected to be proposed by Hopkins with the condition that all unemployable cases on relief rolls be taken over by State and local relief agencies, thus abolishing the Federal dole.

Continuing his review of the unemployment situation, Green said:

"Unquestionably our relief problem this winter is the most serious this Nation has ever faced. Trade union unemployment figures show a greater increase in unemployment from October to November this year than last year, and part-time work in November (first half) is higher than ever before in the history of our figures.

Incomes Also Decline.

"In building, water transportation, theaters and all the manufacturing groups there are more on part-time than last year. Many of those who have jobs are finding their incomes lower than last year."

Green cited figures showing the number engaged in emergency governmental work (which are counted as unemployed) and traced increase in unemployment, month by month, from January, 1930, to November, this year.

These figures show that the peak of unemployment was reached in the first three months of 1933, when more than 13,000,000 were reported idle. Last January and February there were more than 11,000,000 out of jobs.

Value of New Securities Listed at $34,009,946

Twenty-five were for industrial and commercial issues totaling $26,314,837, and six were for financial institutions and totaled $4,739,351. Eight reorganizations were registered also, with securities totaling, $2,955,737 involved.

Fees paid to the commission were $3,529.

Roosevelt Carves Turkey With Knife Which T. R. Used

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 29 (AP). A silver carving set that sliced white meat off the turkey for President Theodore Roosevelt back in 1904 was wielded by Franklin D. Roosevelt tonight at the Warm Springs founders' day Thanksgiving dinner.

The carving set—and a platter—at that time were the property of Gov. Joseph Meriwether Terrell, then Georgia's chief executive. It was loaned for the occasion by Mrs. J. Render Terrell, of Greenville, Ga., sister-in-law of the former Governor.

The other President Roosevelt was a guest at the executive mansion in 1904.

U. S. Business Invited to Aid Trade Parley

Plan to Promote World Recovery Asked for Paris Conference.

Thousands of American business men were asked yesterday by the International Chamber of Commerce to suggest practical international steps to promote world trade recovery.

Thomas J. Watson, of New York, chairman of the American committee of the chamber, made the request in letters announcing plans for a world conference of business men to be held next June in Paris under the auspices of the international chamber.

Trade Revival Is Goal.

Revival of world trade will be the goal of the international gathering, expected to be attended by more than 1,000 leaders of trade, industry and finance. The tentative program will include discussion of stabilization of relations between currencies, revival of international movement of goods and capital, organization of production and marketing and international transportation problems.

The finance debate will involve de facto stabilization of currencies off the gold standard, avoidance of competitive currency depreciation, cooperative use of gold reserve by central banks, action on the price level and abolition of foreign exchange controls and exchange clearing.

Export Problems on Agenda.

Problems of interest to exporters and importers due for consideration include protection of industrial property, commercial arbitration, trade terms, legal safeguards for creditors, double taxation and the status of foreign companies.

Watson will be aided in perfecting American arrangements for the conference by Owen D. Young, New York financier; Henry I. Harriman, chamber president, and Eliot Wadsworth, American vice president of the international organization and president of the Boston chamber.

Ohio Couple Drowned As Car Leaps Into Creek

Westfield, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. George L. Ferguson, of Cleveland, Ohio, were drowned near Ripley, N. Y., today as their automobile left the highway and was submerged in a small creek.

Ferguson apparently failed to make a turn in the road about a mile north of Ripley and the car struck a culvert.

U. S. Agencies Reported Split On Steel Code

NRA Expected to Be Hit by Trade Commission Survey Finding.

An old feud between the NRA and the Federal Trade Commission probably will flare again shortly when both agencies report on the basing point system of the steel code.

While both reports were closely guarded last night, the F. T. C. was said to have assailed the basing point practice in scorching terms and the NRA findings, prepared by Dr. J. M. Clark, of Columbia University and a group of associates, were understood to defend the provisions.

President Roosevelt, on ordering the surveys in June, instructed both agencies to report to him December 1. The report of the Clark committee has not yet been acted on by the NRA administrative board, which will forward it to the White House.

Wants F. O. B. Rates.

The F. T. C. report probably will contain ammunition for NRA opponents when revision of the recovery act is considered by the new Congress. The Trade Commission is expected to demand f. o. b. mill freight rates instead of the present code system, under which a mill may charge a customer across the street the price of theoretical freight from a distant basing point.

Observers regarded the sharp difference between the F. T. C. and the NRA as new evidence of lack of coordination between Federal agencies. They recalled recent quarrels between the Public Works Administration and the Federal Housing Administration, the State Department and Administration foreign trade advisers and the Reclamation Bureau and the AAA.

As early as last March the Trade Commission emphasized its opposition to the basing point system in a report to the Senate in which the entire steel code was condemned on the ground that it sanctioned industrial abuses.

Discrimination Charged.

Such provisions, the commission charged, tended to eliminate "the small enterprise not located at the basing point by requiring it to charge the same amount for freight on deliveries in its immediate vicinity as if the product had been in fact shipped from the basing point at which mills of large competitors are located."

Such code provisions, the commission added, result in discriminatory net mill prices; discriminate against fabricators at mill points which do not happen to be basing points; have a tendency to centralize producing and fabricating industries at basing points, and minimize the usefulness of waterway and truck transportation through imposition of all-rail freight.

Another element entering into the situation is the fact that the powerful Iron and Steel Institute, code authority for the steel industry, has insisted on retention of the basing point provisions, and NRA officials have feared elimination of the clauses might lead to surrender of the code by the industry.

Priest's Murder 'Explained,' Claim

Letter Punctures Defense, Girl's Father Says.

Hollywood, Nov. 29 (AP).—Asserted evidence that would break down any "unwritten-law" defense in the killing of Ruth Armstrong Steinmetz and a Catholic priest in New York last Monday was claimed here today by Samuel Armstrong, father of the slain girl.

Armstrong said the evidence was contained in the last letter written by his daughter. It reached him yesterday.

The letter disclosed "the motive" of Harry Steinmetz, 22, husband of the girl, in the slaying, Armstrong said.

Richly Gowned Women Watch Marina Bridal

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

London, Nov. 29.—Most any woman—English, American or Hottentot—would have given her weight in gold today for a seat in Westminster Abbey to see the enactment of an Old World fairy story—the wedding of a handsome prince and his lovely princess.

Weeks of preparation had roused all England to an almost unbelievable pitch of interest and excitement over the marriage of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina.

Outside the ancient abbey, under the dripping autumn leaves, multitudes watched and waited. Women fainted in the crush, others became hysterical.

Notables Gathered Within.

Within the abbey were gathered royalty, nobility, statesmen, soldiers, diplomats of many lands, their richly adorned wives with them.

The women, wearing tiaras, bracelets and necklaces with their gowns, and the men wearing uniforms, court dress or evening dress with crosses and ribbons on the breast, jeweled swords by their sides and yards of gold braid brightening their costumes, moved through the dim shadows of the abbey, a colorful array.

The women were soberly dressed by the wishes of Queen Mary. Rich silk and velvets fell in heavy folds around their feet, while the shoulders of most of them were covered with Russian sables, mink and yellow ermine.

More splendid than the women's gowns were the uniforms of the admirals and military men, with their plumes of rich red, their blue-braided jackets with 6-inch high epaulets and their shining, high-legged boots.

Binghams in Court Dress.

The assembled diplomatic corps included United States Ambassador and Mrs. Robert W. Bingham in court dress.

Mrs. Bingham was lovely in a Chinese red crepe with brown and gold introduced in the scarf which fell from her shoulders. She also wore sables.

Behind them was David Lloyd-George, war-time premier, one of the most picturesque of all the guests with his snow-white hair shining against his deeply black, theatrical cape.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald, decked out in the gold braid of his court uniform, hurried along with his daughter, Ishbel, seemingly afraid he was late. After him came his dignified cabinet, all their ladies wearing velvet of colors varying from deep mulberry and black to lighter reds and emerald greens.

The bride's mother, Princess Nicholas, stood out sharp against the somber colors in her white and gold brocade gown. Russian ermine of many years' tradition hung to her waist.

But more brilliant, more stately, and more heavily studded with gems than all the rest was England's Queen Mary. From the shoulders of her gown to her waist she was armoured with diamonds.

A Blue Pastel Gown.

The Queen wore a beautiful blue pastel gown, and the blue sash of the Order of the Garter, with a hat the same shade as the gown crowned with ostrich feathers. So brilliant were her diamonds that each time she turned she threw light into shadows.

The princess royal, the Countess of Harewood, King George's only daughter, was there, wearing blue of a forget-me-not shade, while the eternally smiling Duchess of York, much of whose time was spent watching her 8-year-old daughter, Princess Margaret, wore deep rose velvet with diamonds matching her sparkling headpiece.

The Prince of Wales was nervous and fidgety. So was the Duke of Kent as he waited for his bride.

Then she appeared, the tall, slim Grecian princess, in a Tudor gown, pale and nervous, with head bowed. The long white-and-silver brocade clung to her figure and entangled in her feet as she walked. Tulle escaped down her shoulders. Her train was 15 feet long. At the end of it were her eight bridesmaids, dressed exactly like her except their gowns were of crepe, with silver sashes at their waists.

The music and the ceremonial proceeded. Marina met her bridegroom, but they did not seem to look at each other as the choirs' voices rose and fell.

After the ringing address of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Marina handed her bouquet to the duke. Confused, he passed it on to the Prince of Wales. Wales held it uncertainly for a few seconds and then laid it on the floor, the ceremony going on without interruption.

In the flickering candlelight and the reflected colors from the stained glass windows, the wedding ring was slipped on Marina's finger.

A little-known Grecian princess had become the fourth lady of this ancient land. And outside the walls of the abbey England was hysterical.

Thousands of others arose before daylight to make their way in the dawn to the streets along which the processions passed.

Smiling and waving as the surge of fervent adulation swelled about them, Kent and Marina drove to the Abbey in the King's famous glass coaches for the first ceremony.

While kings and queens, dukes and duchesses, lords and ladies, diplomats and other distinguished persons listened, the resonant voice of the white-haired Archbishop of Canterbury echoed and reechoed through the domes and vaulted Abbey as he led the couple through the wedding lines.

The bridegroom took the golden wedding ring from the hand of his eldest brother, the Prince of Wales, who, though not best man, carried out his functions, and placed it upon Marina's finger, repeating after the archbishop:

"With this ring I thee wed, with my body I thee worship, and with all my worldly goods I thee endow: In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

Queen Mary Sheds Tears.

As the final words were said Queen Mary brushed her eyes. King George, standing with his hand resting on the hilt of his shining sword, looked straight forward.

A choir of 70 voices chanted melodious "Amens" to two prayers that followed, after which the couple moved slowly to the altar, decorated with golden plates and altar pieces.

There they knelt again as the precentor of the Abbey choir chanted psalm responses, followed by the Lord's Prayer, in which many of the congregation joined.

After further prayers and the hymn "God Be in My Head" came the archbishop's address.

At the conclusion of his benediction, the national anthem swelled from the great organ, with the choir and the audience singing with it. An anthem, "Alleluia! Alleluia!" written especially for the occasion, followed.

The couple then signed the registers in the Chapel of the Confessors—the duke wrote simply "George" and the princess "Marina." King George, Queen Mary, Prince and Princess Nicholas of Greece, parents of the bride, and others of the royal families signed after them.

After five minutes, while the huge congregation stood quietly, the party returned, reformed for the procession and moved out of the Abbey to go to Buckingham Palace.

Adhering rigidly to the precise schedule the King laid down, the 1,500 guests were seated in their assigned places in the Abbey before the royal party arrived.

The scarlets, blues, golds and whites of the assembly, shot through with the glitter of precious stones and the sparkle of medals, changed and shimmered in swift, broken patterns as the guests arose first to acknowledge the arrival of the royal personages and then to join in hymns and prayers during the ceremony.

Aga Khan, of India, Attends.

Not the least picturesque of the men, all in uniform, court dress or evening dress, was the Aga Khan, of India, resplendent in his richly embroidered coat and black fez.

Another vivid splash of color was provided by the King's bodyguard, the "Gentlemen at Arms," outfitted smartly in scarlet coat, heavily braided dark trousers with wide gold stripes and golden helmet with flowing white plume, who served as ushers and who stood at attention at the nearby altar afterward.

The guests were seated at 10:15 a. m. Then came the members of the royal families with the King and Queen, and their immediate suite arriving last. Meanwhile the clergy, gowned and coped and carrying the staffs and emblems of their office, moved in procession to the altar and took their places.

A minute or more before the arrival of Marina, Kent, supported by his elder brothers, the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York, proceeded to the altar steps where he awaited the bride and her eight bridesmaids.

Marina entered the west door promptly at 10:58 a. m., clinging to the arm of her father. The bridesmaids fell into line, with 8-year-old Princess Elizabeth, the Duke's niece, and 10-year-old Lady Mary Cambridge carrying the ends of Marina's long flowing veil.

The procession then moved to the altar to the accompaniment of the organ's playing of the "Trumpet Tune and Air," swinging afterward into the hymn "Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost."

Kent and Marina spoke their vows kneeling while the bridesmaids stood in two files in the aisle.

Wales the Most Nervous.

Referring to the fact that radio made it possible for vast multitudes to listen to the ceremony, the archbishop said "the whole nation, nay the whole empire, are wedding guests.

"* * * We all wish you happiness, but our wishes can not give it. Nor can it come from outward circumstances. It can only come from yourselves * * *. You can not choose what changes and chances are to befall you in coming years. But you can choose the spirit with which you meet them * * *."

A short time after the state wedding at the Abbey the young couple sealed their troth again with the ancient and symbolical Greek Orthodox ceremony in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace.

Half Million Cheer Parade; Brilliance of Rites Dazzles Throngs.

Archbishop Strinopoulos Germanos, head of the Greek Church in England, officiated at the second ceremony. The scent of incense filled the chapel as Marina and George, under the eyes of their kinsmen, performed the intricate ceremony.

The archbishop wore his magnificent robes of office and his black-veiled headpiece. A heavy chain supported the massive emblem of office at his throat.

"Office of the Betrothal."

The couple entered the chapel bearing lighted tapers. The archbishop awaited them at a table in the middle of the room, on which was a large Bible decorated with gold and silver. Gold and silver candlesticks, a cross of precious metal, two rings, two crowns and red wine for the wedding cup were nearby. Two children at either side held lighted tapers.

Facing the archbishop, "the man on the right and the woman on the left" as the ritual prescribed, Kent and Marina heard a litany and prayer, after which came the so-called "office of the betrothal" in which the exchange of rings was effected.

The archbishop first blessed the rings, handing one first to the bridegroom and saying:

"The servant of God, the Duke of Kent, is betrothed to the servant of God, Princess Marina, in the name of God, the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

"Office of the Crowning."

With the ring he made the sign of the cross over the bridegroom's head. A similar ritual for the bride followed, the words of the betrothal then being pronounced three times to both the Duke and his bride and the archbishop afterward placing the rings on the third finger of their right hands.

A longer ceremony, the "Office of the Crowning," followed, in which each of the two was crowned three times by the archbishop as he repeated words similar to those of the bethrothal ritual.

As this was completed, the Prince of Wales interchanged both the rings and the crowns three times. A benediction was spoken meanwhile.

The Greek Orthodox ceremony also included the ritual of the drinking of the wine. The archbishop first blessed the cup and the wine, then passed it first to the bridegroom and afterward to the bride, both of whom drank of it.

The final ceremony was that in which the duke and his bride, escorted by two priests and the Prince of Wales, circled the table while the choir, without musical accompaniment, chanted hymns. The procession ended in front of the table, where the archbishop spoke a few words of advice, gave his final blessing and said a special prayer.

The wedding breakfast thereafter was served to 120 guests, some five wedding cakes providing the center of attraction. The largest was cut with the duke's sword.

Royal Honeymooners Arrive At Quiet Himley Hall Retreat

Only the Servants Greet Duke and Duchess of Kent.

Himley, England, Nov. 29 (AP).—Their exciting wedding day over, the Duke and Duchess of Kent found quiet and calm at Himley Hall, their honeymoon retreat, this evening.

Cheered all along the route of their special train, King George's youngest son and his bride, Princess Marina of Greece, were greeted only by servants when their automobile rolled up in front of the spacious country home of the Earl of Dudley.

The housekeeper and the butler did the honors, ushering them into the flower-banked interior. They dined alone, later inspecting the apartment prepared for them, and the squash racquets court, converted into a miniature cinema, where later they will see motion pictures of their wedding.

Huge throngs greeted the couple's passage through the English countryside and thousands gathered at Dudley, the last town through which they passed before reaching the hall, to applaud the newlyweds.

They came to this village, in the heart of the "Black Country" of coal mines and ironworks, by a triple journey of horse-drawn carriage, rail and automobile.

Immediately after the wedding breakfast at Buckingham Palace they drove to Paddington Station behind four gray horses from King George's stables at Windsor. From London to Birmingham they traveled by special train and from the latter city here by automobile.

The first part of the honeymoon, which will end with the duchess taking her place in the whirl of activities which surrounds the royal family, will be spent here. They probably will join the King and Queen at Sandringham for the Christmas season and then complete their honeymoon on the continent.

The completion of the honeymoon will mark the start of a busy season for the duchess, since next year the silver jubilee of King George promises to be a busy one. Naval ceremonies will occupy a prominent place in the anniversary celebrations. Since the duke holds the rank of commander in that branch, the duchess thereby will be placed in the center of attraction.

Hundreds Going To Colonial Ball

Hundreds of persons are expected to attend the Bladensburg colonial ball tonight at the Beaver Dam Country Club as the Bladensburg Historical Society launches its Nation-wide drive for funds with which to restore the historical town "to its former glory."

Aproximately 60 persons, some of them descendants of noted colonial personages, will portray the characters who visited and lived in Bladensburg when the village was recognized as one of the most important "ports" on the eastern seaboard.

Capital Dodges Or Braves Rain For Joyous Day

Steady rainfall throughout the day failed to interfere with Washington's observance of America's annual day of thanksgiving yesterday.

Quiet family observance, with thousands attending church services and football games, marked the simply celebrated day. Many left the city by train, automobile and plane, to pass the holiday with friends and familes in nearby States, but local hotels and restaurants were crowded with Thanksgiving diners.

The rain, varying from the steady drizzle of the early morning to a late afternoon downpour, stopped after 4 p. m., but more was promised by the Weather Bureau for today and tonight, with temperatures slated to fall below yesterday's range of 57-61 degrees.

Crowd at Football Game.

The downpour did not dampen the ardor of more than 6,000 football fans who trooped out to Griffith Stadium to watch athletes of the universities of George Washington and Oklahoma battle in water and mud.

Nor did it thin the throngs that annually fill the city's churches. Union services at more than a dozen churches were amply attended, and hundreds came for special Thanksgiving rites in the Great Choir of the Washington Cathedral and in St. Patrick's Church, where mass was celebrated for delegates of the Catholic Church from the Americas.

St. Patrick's Services.

At St. Patrick's, His Excellency, the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, D. D., apostolic delegate to the United States, presided at the annual Pan-American mass, attended by staffs of the Latin-American legations and celebrated by the Right Rev. Emmet Michael Walsh, D. D., Bishop of Charleston, S. C. The Very Rev. Edward G. Fitzgerald, O. P., of Catholic University, delivered the sermon.

Special Thanksgiving dinners were served at the Transient Relief Bureau, the Volunteers of America, to the families of colored needy at the Florida Avenue Baptist Church, the Childrens Emergency Home and other charitable institutions.

Inmates of the Lorton Reformatory were served turkey and all the usual trimmings. Prisoners at the District Jail were served pork.

Maryland Estate Sold for $100,000

G. M. Moffett Is Purchaser of Blakeford.

Centreville, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Blakeford, the colonial estate near here, whose boundaries were originally marked out by a thumb, today had passed from the possession of the Thom family, descendants of Henry Courcy (or De Courcy).

The sale, made under terms of the will of Decourcy Wright Thom, was made to George M. Moffett. The price was said to have been about $100,000.

For services given the Government at the Five Nations congress at Albany, N. Y., in 1677, Henry Courcy was offered by the Maryland Governor as much land on a map as his thumb could cover. Courcy placed his thumb on the shore of Queenstown Creek and rolled it over. The area covered was about 1,600 acres.

Thanksgiving Basket to Poor.

Thanksgiving baskets were distributed yesterday among the needy of Decatur Heights (Md.) by members of the Housekeepers' Club. Distribution was under the direction of Mrs. W. R. Beattie.

London's Society, en Masse, Sees Royal Lovers to Train

'Hollywood' Setting Scene of Pair's Farewell at Station.

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—The best bit of theater in the entire pageant of the wedding of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina was its London finale—the 'couple's departure from Paddington Station on the honeymoon special.

The setting for the couple's farewell bows would have done credit to the imagination and artistry of Hollywood's finest.

One entire section of the platform, on which lavishly appointed royal coaches waited, was inclosed by bleachers rising at either end and occupied by several hundred top-hatted and bejeweled spectators.

Crysanthemums, thousands of them, white and yellow, were banked on either side of the entrance. A white floral horseshoe was overhead.

Although the bridal pair was ten minutes late reaching the station, no one made the slightest move to depart, every eye remaining riveted on the velvet drapes of the portal.

A burst of cheering without heralded their final arrival, and moments later Marina stepped into the calcium glare, followed closely by the duke.

The bridal party, including half a dozen church officials in blue robes, stepped on the stage behind the principals. Then, while batteries of cameras whirred and clicked, the couple made one final round of handshaking before climbing aboard the flower-banked coach.

Almost instantly the train began silently moving as cheers arose from the spectators to be echoed by the tens of thousands choking the streets adjoining. The royal newlyweds just reached the great windows of the lounge car in time to wave adieus.

Marina evidently had never gone in much for this waving business. She held her palm inward and waved with a short, jerky motion, such as one might use as a summons.

Outside, meanwhile, in the gathering darkness, mounted police made futile efforts to unscramble the wedding-weary crowd and get it started home.

Holter Quits County Board

Middletown Man Shatters Record With 17 Years of Service.

Middletown, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Shattering all records for the number of years served as a member of the board of commissioners for Frederick County, John W. Holter, Middletown, will retire Monday after having served as a county official for 17 years, although his terms did not run concurrently.

Mr. Holter first was elected to the board in 1911 on the Democratic ticket, served four years, and then decided to devote his entire time to his farm. Consequently he did not seek reelection. During the last two years of this tenure in office he was president.

Six years later he was reelected commissioner again. During this term a change was made in the election laws, and his time did not expire until 1926, when he was elected to succeed himself. In 1930 he again sought the office and was successful. He has been president of the board nine years.

The newly elected board, composed of A. H. Derr, U. Grant Hooper and Jesse I. Renner, all Republicans, will assume their duties Monday. This will be the first time since 1923 that the Republicans have had control. All the new commissioners are from the Frederick Valley, and this will be the first time in nearly half a century that Middletown Valley has not had a representative on the board.

New York Sales Tax For Relief Adopted

Board Ignores Protests; Expect $60,000,000

New York, Nov. 28 (U.P.).—Ignoring protests from more than 80 business organizations, the board of estimate last night voted to adopt Mayor Florello H. LaGuardia's $60,000,000 relief tax program. The vote was 12 to 1.

The program calls for a 2 per cent sales tax on everything except food products, an increase to 3 per cent in the utility tax and a 1 per cent inheritance tax. It is expected to provide for the city's relief needs until the end of 1935.

Japanese Sees Britain Winner In Navy Parley

Tokyo Observer Envisages U. S. as Butt of Possible Oriental Ill Will.

The following article interpreting Great Britain as winner of the London naval conversations represents a Japanese viewpoint of the London situation written for Japanese consumption. K. K. Kawakami, the author, prepared it for the Osaka Mainichi and Tokyo Nichi-Nichi, of which he is correspondent. It is carried herewith as representing a typical Japanese viewpoint rather than consensus of Washington opinion.

By K. K. Kawakami.
(United Press.)

There is increasing satisfaction apparent in official circles in Washington over Great Britain's expressed desire for harmonious relations with America in naval adjustment.

The olive branch which such outstanding Britishers as Ramsay MacDonald, Sir John Simon and Stanley Baldwin offered America last week came as a surprise to the State Department, which had been apprehensive of Britain's uncertain attitude with its apparent early pro-Japanese leaning.

Kept Tokyo Friendship.

This view is based on the fact that she managed to keep Japanese friendship by making it appear that she was willing to concede to Japan's parity claims but was restrained by American objection.

Great Britain thus succeeded in making America the butt of possible Japanese ill-will following breakdown of the London talks.

On the other hand, Britain befriended America by rejecting finally the Japanese parity plea.

Another clever British move designed to show sympathy with the Japanese was the dispatch of an economic mission to Manchukuo. This apparently was intended to make it appear Britain is willing to recognize Manchukuo, but is held back by American nonrecognition. Tangible results of this supposedly are seen in the reported agreement of Manchukua to buy $40,000,000 worth of British railway materials.

"Inspired Publicity."

American press and diplomatic circles suspected Japan of maneuvering at London to drive a wedge between America and Great Britain, but the reverse seems to be true. For instance, I was reliably told in Tokyo last September that British sources had sounded out Japan whether she would acept a 5-4-4 ratio, with Great Britain having the 5. But the American press spreads the news that this suggestion originated in Japan.

I also know that Japan has no intention of asking for preservation of the fortification status quo in the Pacific in event the Washington treaty is terminated. But American papers report that Japan has asked for that.

The sudden exploitation of the Manchukuo oil policy at a crucial moment of the London parley smacks of inspired publicity designed to embarrass Japan.

Thieves Miss Gold, Get $4,000 on Ship

Believed After Ingot on Liner President Harding.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Thieves whose objective was believed to have been a $60,000 gold ingot in a safe in the United States liner President Harding stole $4,553.20 from another safe on the ship, it was disclosed yesterday. The President Harding sailed for Europe at noon.

The gold ingot was brought to the ship's pier last night in an armored car. It was to have been placed in the purser's safe, but no one knew the combination and it was deposited in the postoffice safe of the liner. Detectives believed the robbery was committeed by persons who were well informed of the movement of the gold ingot, but were unaware of the last minute decision to place it in the postoffice safe.

End of War Near, Paraguayans Assert

Asuncion, Paraguay, Nov. 29 (AP). Reports that Bolivian troops were retiring along all fronts in the Chaco Boreal brought thousands of Paraguayans into the streets tonight, celebrating what they believed was the beginning of the end of the long war.

The reports were posted on bulletin boards to the accompaniment of shreiking whistles, screaming sirens and the explosion of giant firecrackers.

A communique from Gen. Jose Estigarribia, Paraguayan commander in chief, said Bolivians were retreating "before our energetic pressure on the entire front from the Pilcomayo River to Puesto Bolivia, northeast of Fort Strongest."

"Our troops are advancing toward Fort Dorbigney and Cururenda, where the Bolivians are making desperate efforts to defend themselves," Estigarribia announced. He claimed the capture of numerous prisoners, among them many officers.

Bolivian Retreat.

A political upheaval in Bolivia yesterday was followed by reports that Bolivian troops were retiring and the announcement of the new push in the Pilcomayo sector, where Paraguayans recently captured Fort Ballivan and 7,000 Bolivian troops.

The reported Bolivian advance and Paraguayan retirement coincided not only with Bolivian internal dissension but also with the arrival of fresh Paraguayan detachments to replace the shock regiments which recently encircled and captured 7,000 Bolivians in the Canada el Carmen and Ballivian sectors.

Capital Fears Finish Of War Is Retarded

Belief that the coup d'etat in Bolivia might retard early termination of the Chaco war in South America was expressed yesterday in Latin-American circles in Washington.

This opinion was given following receipt of definite indications that high army leaders were involved in the overthrow of the Bolivian government, according to the Associated Press.

Previously it had been understood here the movement was headed by nonmilitary leaders who desired an end of the long conflict between Bolivia and Paraguay.

It was reliably reported here that Vice President Jose Luis Tejada Sorzano, who seized the presidency and caused the resignation of President Salamanca, was attempting to form a government of parties.

Indications received here were that Liberals, the army and Saavedristas combined in supporting Sorzano. Saavedra formerly was president.

"The movement is definitely military," one informed source said.

He voiced the opinion Bolivia may wage a more vigorous campaign in the Chaco and that this would oppose present League of Nations efforts to terminate the war through arbitration.

Bolivian armies recently have suffered serious setbacks in the 2½-year-old conflict.

Missing Californians Believed Key in Murder of Three Girls

Carlisle. They have been established as the traveling companions of the couple shot to death in the railroad shanty, 100 miles away, but the manner of their death still is a mystery.

Automobile Is Traced.

McElroy said Noakes would have had "just about time to get to Waynesboro" from California.

It was at Waynesboro the trail of the automobile and the family first was picked up Saturday, November 17, and traced to Gettysburg, South Langhorne and Philadelphia during the next three days. Then the trail was lost.

The bodies were found Saturday, the three girls on a mountainside in Carlisle and the man and woman at Duncansville.

McElroy said the proprietor of a Waynesboro lodging house reported the man, who spent the night there with a woman and three children, said they had been driving "for seven days from California."

Capt. Charles LaPorte, of California State highway patrol, said he learned Noakes had left his home there suddenly November 11 or 12, with two weeks' salary still due him from the company with which he was employed.

Pictures Sent to Coast.

Chief E. E. York, of the Roseville police, also said Miss Pierce had disappeared and reported Noakes' wife had been dead two years, and that Miss Pierce had been living at his home, caring for his children.

Maj. C. M. Wilhelm, deputy superintendent of State police, has sent pictures of the five bodies to the Pacific Coast. Lieut. McElroy said descriptions he has received of Noakes and his children tally with the descriptions of the three children in Carlisle and the man found in the railroad shanty at Duncansville. The woman found with the man "could be Miss Pierce," McElroy said.

Meantime, plans were nearly completed for a semimilitary funeral for the three children at 10:30 a. m. Saturday. A Presbyterian pastor, an Episcopalian rector and a Catholic priest will officiate. Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Girl Reserves will take part.

Guard of Honor.

A guard of honor of the Carlisle American Legion, which is arranging the funeral, will take up a vigil beside the bodies in the morgue from tomorrow until the burial.

A plot for the three girls' graves has been donated in a cemetery near Mechanicsburg, not far from Pennsylvania's capital, and a manufacturing company has contributed a brass marker.

The funeral plans are in charge of David V. Brinkley, the man who posed for the American doughboy statue in the Library of Congress.

Another appael was sent to school authorities throughout the Nation to recheck classrooms for three empty seats. It was suggested this check center around children of the third grade, because the youngest of the little girls is reported to have told a woman in a Philadelphia restaurant she was in that grade.

Tentative Identifications.

That bit of information was given to Mrs. Anna Lefauvre, customer of the restaurant, who bought the child a dinner after the man, woman and two other children with her asked for a meal to be "split" among the tots.

Mrs. Lefauvre was one of several persons who identified the bodies of the children and the man and woman as being in the group which drove through central and eastern Pennsylvania in recent days, stopping at tourist cabins on their way. Mrs. Lefauvre said all were in the party which stopped at the restaurant in Philadelphia.

Another of the several identifications of the bodies was made today by Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Petrie, tourist home operators at Waynesboro, who said a man, woman and three

PolicePurchase Ten Scout Cars

Radio-Equipped Machines to Be Put Into Use Within 2 Weeks.

Ten new radio scout cars have been purchased by the Police Department, Inspector William G. Stott announced yesterday. They will be placed in service within two weeks.

The new cars will bring the total of radio-equipped automobiles on the force to 49. Of these, 33 will be used in patrolling the precincts and 16 will be assigned to inspectors and the various detective squads.

As soon as the cars are delivered the precincts will be equipped with automobiles as follows: First, 3; Second, 3; Third, 3; Fourth, 2; Fifth, 1; Sixth, 3; Seventh, 3; Eighth, 3; Ninth, 2; Tenth, 3; Eleventh, 4, and Twelfth, 4.

Inspector Stott said he wanted it understood that the cars were not replacing all of the foot patrolmen, even in the outlying precincts, but that officers in cars have been found to give far better protection to the public than the foot patrolmen.

Navy Delegates Suspend Talks On Nuptial Day

Three Powers Today Again Plunge Into Task of Ending Deadlock.

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—With the royal wedding over, the sorely beset representatives of the United States, Japan and Great Britain tonight plunged once more into the task of finding a solution to the grave naval situation among the three great sea powers.

There was nothing to indicate that prospects of a compromise on the deadlock between Japan and the United States over naval parity were any brighter, but the Japanese and British delegates appeared to be more optimistic than the Americans.

Today, the vital conversations by which the three powers hope to avoid limitless naval competition, were put aside as the delegates joined in the celebration of the wedding of Princess Marina and the Duke of Kent.

Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto, Japanese delegate, spent the day in communication with his home government in Tokyo, not even leaving his hotel for the occasion. It was believed that he would discuss details supporting the Japanese demands with the British tomorrow. The Americans and the British may also meet tomorrow.

Some quarters expressed the belief that Japan may yield somewhat on her original demands for equality with the United States, but Japanese circles continued to deny this emphatically.

Although the conversations are apparently at a hopeless deadlock, the British have not given up hope that some sort of a compromise between the two stands could be reached, and have made informal proposals to that end.

Sing Sing Inmates Eat Prison Grown Turkeys

Ossining, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—Sing Sing prison has a new industry—turkey raising. This was disclosed today with the Thanksgiving Day feed.

The turkeys served to hospital prisoners, 12 birds weighing around 16 pounds each, were all raised in the prison grounds. Without notice, Warden Lewis Lawes allowed James Pyn, a life termer, to experiment with turkey raising.

U. S. Tightens Tax Case Grip Upon Schultz

Bond Raised to $100,000 as Racketeer Files Not Guilty Plea.

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—Public Enemy Dutch Schultz, unshaven and scowling, looked on silently today while the Federal Government strengthened its campaign to retire the former New York racket leader to prison on an allegation he and his mob leaders neglected to pay a tax on income of $1,000,000.

Not long after he had eaten Thanksgiving Day dinner in the Albany County Jail, Schultz answered to an income tax violation indictment, secretly returned almost two years ago. The indictment was not opened until yesterday, when Schultz, whose real name is Arthur Flegenheimer, surrendered to United States Commissioner Lester T. Hubbard here.

Bond Raised to $100,000.

Federal agents were closing in on Schultz when he turned up to face the Federal charge.

Bond, fixed yesterday at $50,000, was raised to $100,000 at the suggestion of Seymour M. Klein, assistant district attorney of New York. The warrant on which Schultz was arrested yesterday as a fugitive from justice was dismissed.

Schultz, through his attorney, James M. Noonan, pleaded not guilty to the tax-evasion charge. Arraignment was set for December 12.

Schultz, one of the "big shots" of the lush bootleg era in New York City before the depression, was in his shirt sleeves when brought into Warden Rensselaer Taylor's office for today's proceedings. He chewed gum violently and nervously glanced around the room.

Twelve Counts in Indictment.

Noonan resisted Klein's effort to increase the bond.

"The crime of which Schultz is accused," said Klein, "is very serious. There are about 12 counts in the indictment. If he were convicted under all of them he would be sent to jail for the rest of his life.

"Although he surrendered voluntarily, he is apt to change his mind at any time. It is imperative that he be present at the examination."

The $1,000,000 income which the Government claims Schultz and his lieutenants banked in 1929, '30 and '31, is reported to have come out of the beer racket.

The complaint against Schultz was signed by Leo I. Keyes, special agent of the Internal Revenue Bureau, who helped build up the income tax case which sent Al Capone to prison.

20 Indians Are Shot Defending Images

4 Killed Defying Mexican Officials at Church.

Mexico City, Nov. 29 (AP).—Twenty Indians in the village of Huixtla, Chiapas State, stood quietly in front of their church last Sunday and allowed themselves to be shot down by officials who sought to remove and burn images. Three men and a child were killed.

The story, as told in belated dispatches reaching the capital today, said the villagers adopted the method of passive resistance when officials tried to enter the church.

They surrounded the edifice, standing quietly and refusing to allow the men to go in. The latter finally opened fire with pistols, killing 4 and wounding 16 of the defenders. The officers were forced to abandon their mission.

Gen. Cardenas Today to Take Mexican Helm

Veteran Soldier, at 39, to Be Nation's Youngest President.

Mexico City, Nov. 29 (AP).—Gen. Lazardo Cardenas, whose knowledge of the aims of the Mexican revolution was gained at first hand during nearly 15 years of military campaigning, will take the oath of office as forty-fifth President of Mexico tomorrow.

A veteran of the field, Cardenas also has had experience in government. He held office under the revolutionary government for five years before his election July 1 to succeed President Abelardo Rodriguez.

Youngest of Mexico's Presidents at 39, he comes into office at a time when the revolutionary movement, during five years of internal peace, has consolidated and strengthened its position to such an extent that it has virtually no articulate opposition.

Term Runs to 1940.

During his term, scheduled to end in 1940, he is expected to attempt to bring to fulfillment the economic and social programs outlined in the six-year plan of the National Revolutionary (Government) Party.

President Abelardo Rodriguez will transfer the power to Cardenas, but no change in parties is involved nor is any important revision foreseen in the policies of "directed economy" and social betterment carried on by the retiring administration.

On the eve of the inauguration political circles were still speculating as to the makeup of the president-elect's cabinet. No official information has been forthcoming.

Precautions Taken.

Announcement of the names of the various ministers was expected to reveal how Cardenas intends to deal with religious and educational questions, which are the only serious controversial problems in sight.

Dressed in a plain black business suit in keeping with the country's "spirit of modesty and socialism," Cardenas will be sworn into office at noon at ceremonies in the national stadium. He will go directly to the national palace to receive the greetings and congratulations of the diplomatic corps.

Arrangements have been made to accommodate more than 75,000 persons in the stadium and, although no trouble is expected, extraordinary precautions have been ordered to protect the president-elect and other officials.

Priest Overcome When He Ignores Fire to End Mass

Towson, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—As firemen fought a fire in the basement of the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception here this morning, most of the 150 people, although seeing the smoke seeping through the building, remained in their pews to the end of the service.

The Rev. Stephen Helzelsour completed the mass he was celebrating before he swooned from the thick smoke. He was taken to the adjoining rectory and was revived.

Two fire companies brought under control the fire, which was confined to the basement under the altar. The damage was estimated at $5,000. A fireman also was overcome.

$100,000 Suit Lost by Bailey

Case Against Builder Dismissed by District Supreme Court.

A jury in District Supreme Court Wednesday night decided that neither the District Government nor a contractor need pay Ivan W. Bailey, of 2621 Seventeenth street northeast, any part of the $100,000 he was suing them for, and Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue dismissed the case.

Three days of testimony brought out that Bailey had been driving an automobile south on Connecticut avenue, between Porter and Rodman streets northwest, on February 8, 1933, when his car collided with a steam shovel owned by the Peter D'Adamo Construction Co., and ran into an excavation being made for the District Government. Bailey was seriously injured.

Children Guests as President Slices Thanksgiving Turkey

Guest at Luncheon.

Waving aside all cares of state, Mr. Roosevelt devoted virtually the whole day to the foundation, which has always been his principal hobby. He attended a luncheon at the home of Keith Morgan, a trustee, of New York City, and presided at a meeting of the trustees that followed.

He then drove to the rear grounds about Georgia Hall, the colonial center of the foundation, to dedicate two new buildings which have been constructed to take the place of historic old Meriwether Inn, the weather-beaten hotel that had been regarded as a fire trap.

There, the President found it necessary to pilot his little manual-controlled machine among several hundred visitors, which entailed much backing and edging to get before Kress Hall. This is one of the two new units and is named for the three Kress brothers, of New York—Samuel, Claude and Rush—whose contributions made it and the other annex, Builders Hall, possible.

Accepts New Buildings.

Accepting the new buildings, the President pointed out that Warm Springs can never hope to care for more than a negligible fraction of the crippled.

"Ours, therefore," he continued, "must ever be the greater aim—to maintain here the example of the right way of giving help so that throughout our land other groups and other buildings may carry the torch to the handicapped and crippled wherever they may be."

As a second part of the ceremony, he drove beneath a colonnade built by the people of Columbus, Ga. He recalled, in one of his few references to the subject the "difficult days" he spent here as a patient.

"I shall never forget my early years here before there was any foundation but when the old glories of Warm Springs were being kept alive by my friends from Columbus. I shall always be grateful to them for their helpfulness during the difficult days of transition. I shall always be grateful to the people of Columbus for the great help they have given in many ways since then and it is fitting that this colonnade shall keep that tie unbroken."

Moffett Is President.

In the group of trustees who accompanied the President and Mrs. Roosevelt about the grounds was James A. Moffett, Federal housing administrator, who was inducted as a member at last year's banquet. Mr. Moffett came here with Mrs. Moffett for the exercises and will confer with the President tomorrow.

With him, Mr. Roosevelt is expected to take up phases of the vast housing campaign now under way. The President also is expected to see a host of others before he leaves next Wednesday, including Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, who is looked for on Saturday; Secretaries Ickes and Morgenthau and Postmaster General Farley.

Hegeman Makes Presentation.

If this program is sidetracked, it was reliably reported the 1936 budgets may be held to approximately the same total as the 1935 fiscal year. If the program is included, it was said appropriations may exceed this year by about $5,000,000,000.

Relief Allowed For.

Necessary allowance is being made for extensive work-relief proposals now being whipped into form by Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, as well as some provision for direct relief of those whom old age and physical handicaps render unfit to work. Even some continuance of drought relief, including some $35,000,000 more for seed loans, is expected to be provided.

In the regular Government departments, estimates for most agencies are expected to be submitted around the 1935 fiscal year figure. It was said this will not hold true for the Army and the Navy, however, particularly if failure of London naval conferences forces a world naval race.

Chairman Clifton A. Woodrum, of the independent offices appropriations subcommittee, will direct the hearings next week, covering the whole field of unattached regular Government agencies, embracing the Interstate Commerce Commission, Trade Commission, the Veterans' Administration, and others.

Issues over veterans' benefits and pay restoration, which wrecked last yera's independent offices bill on a troubled congressional sea, largely will be absent. It will be the first time in years this bill will not be burdened with a far-reaching economy rider, fraught with the usual legislative wrangle.

Reform Faces Rough Seas.

As soon as the "emergency" makes it possible, Representative Buchanan would like to renew his drive to remove all legislative provisions from appropriations bills, but the character of Administration proposals now in the making indicates that reform may not have a chance this session.

If legislation is included by the President and the Budget Bureau, the usual practice of obtaining a rule making the proposals in order will be resorted to. Extensive use of this system last session brought loud cries of "gag" from the minority side, but the rules always obtained the necessary two-thirds indorsement. With a Democratic majority of 322 in the House, there is even less likelihood such rules will be blocked in the new Congress.

The $2,200,000,000 bonus issue, while threatening again to upset Administration appropriations planning, is not for the House Appropriations Committee to thresh out. That measure will go to the Ways and Means Committee, and, whether that group reports it favorably or not, it is certain to be evoked by petition of members. It still is a matter of speculation whether an Administration threat of new taxes, or a compromise alternative, will forestall overriding of a presidential veto.

Woodrum Against New Test.

Clifton A. Woodrum (Democrat), Virginia, wrote as follows:

"I do not hesitate to express my impatience at the manner in which this amendment to the appropriation bill has been construed. The result of this reexamination in my judgment has not been for the good of the service. There is, however, another side to the story, and that is that a great many men in this particular branch of the service are passed into the service with only the most perfunctory sort of examination. They are in effect political appointees.

"The matter will have my very earnest attention as soon as I return to Washington, but I am not prepared at the moment to say which course I shall pursue."

Housing Fund Far Too Low, Ickes Asserts

Says Christmas Seal Sales Needed to Assist War on Slums.

Making his first public address on slum clearance and low cost housing since his apparent dispute with James A. Moffett, Federal housing administrator, last week, Secretary Ickes said yesterday that the $150,000,000 already allocated by PWA for this purpose "will barely scratch the surface."

The relationship between housing and tuberculosis was stressed in his speech inaugurating a series of radio talks to stimulate the sale of Christmas seals.

"Not only as a major move in the war against tuberculosis, but for many other weighty social reasons, the cleaning out of our slum areas, both in our cities and on our countryside, ought to be made one of the objectives of Government," he said.

Job at Moffett?

Veiled reference to Moffett's criticism that expansion of the Government's program in small home construction, as envisaged by Ickes, would injure private enterprise, was interpreted in the following portion of the address:

"Until recently the Government really has paid little attention to slums, notwithstanding that our Statesmen have been only a little less aware than have our social workers of their existence . . . But although Government has known the heavy price that we have been paying for our slums, Government, until recently, has done nothing.

"It has stood aside eon the theory that slum eradication was, after all, a matter for nidividual initiative or for local enterprsie.

"Thank God, government has at last admitted its responsibility in the premises by inaugurating a movement for slum clearance that, if carried on with the vigor and enterprise that we are capable of putting behind it, will, in course of time, clean up our slum areas everywhere."

Says Beauty, Squalor Mix.

Washington, product of the best architects and planners since Maj. L'Enfant, was "disease-breeding alley hovels of the worst sort," Ickes said, as well as distinctive avenues and handsome parks.

That the Capital ranks third in tuberculosis deaths among large cities of hte country is "due in part to an inadequate supply of hospitals for the care of the victims of this communicable, preventable and curable disease, and in part to the crowding together of people in insanitary slums," Ickes added.

Although the Federal Government probably will go forward in 1935 with a greatly enlarged slum clearance program, Ickes said, a formidable burden in the fight against tuberculosis still rests and will continue to rest with buyers of Christmas seals.

As a stamp collector himself, the speaker made an especial appeal to philatelists.

"I wonder how many collectors have a complete series of the tuberculosis stamps that have so far been issued?" he asked. "I venture to say that very few have a ful set. I know I have not, although several years ago I undertook to build one up."

Mrs. Vanderbilt Leaves Capital

through her own refusal to "jeopardize" her chances to gain complete custody of Gloria by accepting a judge's ruling that she could have her on week-ends, Mrs. Vanderbilt changed her plans and decided to attend one Thanksgiving party last night. She arranged to take a late train back to New York.

The pale Mrs. Vanderbilt sipped much milk at odd moments in her suite as part of her upbuilding process. She walked with difficulty. But wherever she went, the same adjective followed her, "beautiful!"

$26,740 Housing Work Planned at Winchester

Winchester, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). The Better Housing committee in Winchester announced today that a canvass of 382 of the city's property owners has shown that 137 of them contemplate improvements to their property under provisions of the Federal better housing act.

Improvements planned by the 137 property owners will cost $26,740, Clifford D. Grim, local campaign manager, said.

Man Kills Wife, Self And Wounds 2 Others

Chester, Pa., Nov. 29 (AP).—A man and a woman were shot to death and another couple were seriously wounded in a rooming house last night in what police described as an attempt at triple murder and suicide.

Police said Grover Evans, 38, whom they identified as a "small time" racketeer, walked into the house and opened fire with a sawed-off shotgun on his wife, an unidentified man and a woman named Gibson, then killed himself with a shot in the head.

Mrs. Evans, who was 35, died almost immediately. The wounded were rushed to a hospital in a dying condition.

Death Claims Colonel Rogan

Retired Army Officer Dies in Tennessee; Well Known Here.

Col. Charles B. Rogan, 60, United States Army, retired, of Gallatin, Tenn., died yesterday in Nashville, Tenn., according to advices received here. Col. Rogan was well known in Washington, having served for a number of years with the Signal Corps here.

He was born in Tennessee, September 6, 1874, and was graduated from the University of Tennessee in 1898. He joined the volunteers in 1898 for the Spanish-American War, was made a second lieutenant in the Signal Corps May 20, 1898, and a first lieutenant on June 11, 1900.

On February 2, 1901, he became a first lieutenant in the Army Signal Corps, and rose steadily to his colonelcy, retiring on June 29, 1921. During the World War he served as colonel of the Second Tennessee National Guard. He was for several years adjutant general of that State.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Mary Callan Rogan, and a daughter, Mrs. Cecil Rogan Allen, both of Gallatin, and two sisters, Mrs. E. E. Norris, wife of the Southern Railway Co. vice president, in Washington, and Mrs. W. T. Claiborne, of Knoxville, Tenn. His wife is the sister of Maj. Gen. Robert E. Callan, U. S. A., of Washington.

After funeral services today in Gallatin, interment will take place in Knoxville, Tenn.

So Long, Mud

Waynesboro, Pa., Nov. 29 (Spl.). A campaign platform four years ago to "get the farmer out of the mud" by Gov. Gifford Pinchot has aided Franklin County. A survey today revealed a total of 218 miles of hard-surface all-the-year roads were built or rebuilt during the present Pinchot administration.

In the two Pinchot terms, 225 miles of good roads were received. Altogether the county received 53 miles more of hard roads than in the administrations of all other governors put together, according to the survey.

The survey shows that Franklin County taxpayers were saved $225,255 from 1931 to 1934 by road construction and maintenance of the Pinchot administration.

Man Must Join With Machines, Ezekiel Says

Economic Adviser Says Coordination Must Be Affected.

If the New Deal is to justify the faith which the people of the country have in it, a coordination of men and machines must be effected rythat will make science and machinery servants instead of masters, Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic advisor in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, told the National Council of Teachers of English at the Mayflower yesterday.

Meeting for their twenty-fifth annual convention, nearly 1,000 English teachers were present at the opening session of the three-day assembly last night when E. Creighton Higbie, president of Wilson Teachers' College, delivered the address of welcome.

Dr. Oscar James Campbell, of the University of Michigan, president of the association, discussed "English: Its Domestic and Foreign Policies," while Dr. Frederick James Kelley, chief of the division of higher education, office of education, Department of the Interior, presented "Significant Trends in the Field of High Education." Charles Swain Thomas, of Harvard University, presided.

The culture of today is shared by a larger proportion of the population that was the of the Greeks, or during the Italian Renaissance, the Elizabethethan or the Victorian eras, Dr. Ezekriel said . But notwithstanding, it is shared by "all too small" a proportion, he added.

"The more abundant life" that would make possible a broader share in, and appreciation for, the finer things of life, he continued, is predicated upon the Nation's ability to provide adequate and secure comfort for the individual.

Quoting an annual income of $2,500 as the minimum needed for a family to live "a moderately full life under American conditions," Dr. Ezekiel pointed out that "it is quite apparent that according to this standard the majority of the people do not live abundantly."

Rationalization of industry is the means of remedying these conditions, he said. More effective use of labor power and inventive and organizing genius, coupled with a proper coordination of what we produce and the occupations which the people follow will increase our production to give all underprivileged families a reasonable standard of living, he continued.

"We have the materials and resources," he concluded, "the labor and technical ability, the machines and processes, to maintain for all our people a far more abundant living than most of them have ever enjoyed. All that is needed is to work out the problems of the proper coordination of materials and men to match an expanding ability to produce with an ever-increasing desire to consume."

Today's sessions will open at 9:30 a. m., with addresses throughout the morning by J. M. O'Neill, University of Michigan; R. C. Pooley, University of Wisconsin; Edwin D. Starbuck, University of Southern California; Mark Neville and Ben Wells, John Burroughs School, Clayton, Mo., and Willard W. Beatty, Bronxville, N. Y.

An informal canvass of preconvention sentiment yesterday indicated a trend away from the emphasis in English curricula, and discusions today and tomorrow are expected to crystallize this feeling.

The annual banquet of the association will be held at 6:30 p. m. tonight when Dr. Stephen E. Kramer. first assistant superintendent of schools, will act as toastmaster. Five District junior high school orchestras will provide the music, while the Rev. Francis P. Donnelly, S. J., of Fordham University; Thomas W. Gosling, director of the Junior Red Cross; Allan Abbott, of Teachers' College, Columbia University, and Marjorie Nicholson, dean of Smith College, will be the speakers.

New Deal Wins 9 of 10 Cases In D. C. Court

Railroad Retirement Act Is Only Setback in Roosevelt Program.

With only one defeat to mar its judicial record as against nine victories, "New Deal" legislation has been singularly successful in the District Supreme Court.

The one defeat that met the Government's efforts to reshuffle some of the Nation's major industrial problems is the repulse of the railroad retirement act, a gigantic "social experiment" that met its doom in a lengthy hearing before Chief Justice A. A. Wheat.

The railroad retirement act imposed on the Nation's carriers an annual bill of not less than $60,000,000 and required that all employes, even those admittedly not engaged in "interstate" commerce and therefore not subject to Federal regulation, be retired at a certain age. The bill was held unconstitutional by the Chief Justice because it provided for "white collar" workers not subject to Congressional regulation, and because it deprived the rails of "property without due process of law."

Roosevelt Victories.

In all other instances, the New Deal has met with judicial approval here. Among the nine cases that have been submitted as tests of Roosevelt legislation are the one abrogating the payment of gold certificates in actual gold; a ruling that the Jones-Costigan sugar control act, which, as it was worked out by Secretary Henry Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, seriously curtailed Hawaiian sugar production, was valid; and a further ruling sustaining Wallace's regulations of the Philadelphia and Chicago milk sheds.

The latter two cases were the first to run the gauntlet of a judicial scrutiny and they were both approved by Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue.

The latest of the Government's laws to meet the test was the suit instituted against the W. F. Roberts Co. to compel that organization to submit to the code of fair competition. In an opinion rendered Wednesday, Justice Jennings Bailey held the national industrial recovery act was constitutional as "emergency legislation" in the District, even though it might not be valid outside the city.

Bailey's Ruling.

His reason for that was that Congress had the exclusive right to legislate for the District, and could pass any reasonable legislation, whereas in the States Congress would have to rely on its "interstate commerce powers" to make its laws legally binding.

Two other Government victories were won against the Sabine Motor Agency. The agency lost several Government contracts for Ford cars, even though it was the low bidder, because the Ford Co. could not show it had signed the certificate of compliance with the NRA. That situation has been ironed out recently, and Ford products are apparently no longer under Federal ban. The company sought to compel acceptance of its bids.

Two suits testing the legality of the petroleum code were instituted and both were won by the Government. In one, a Detroit dealer was enjoined from giving premiums to gasoline purchasers, and in the other a large distributigg company agreed to abandon a sales campaign in which prizes were offered to children.

Suits now pending and which are "New Deal" aims, involve the W. Ames Co., of New Jersey, which charged it could not sell its products to the State of New Jersey for road building because of NRA requirements; the Ames, Baldwin, Wyoming Co., of West Virginia, tool makers, who alleged it did a business not subject to Federal regulation and which sought to enjoin the Government from removing its Blue Eagle.

Inviting Disaster.

By flinging a challenge, at once premature and provocative, to Japan, Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee is neither promoting the policy of the Administration, as expressed by Secretary of State Hull, nor the best interests of the country. The consequences of a collapse of naval limitation treaties are unfortunate enough without being aggravated by offensive jingoism on this side of the Pacific.

In serving a belligerent notice upon Japan that he proposes to "insist" that Congress build five warships for every three laid down by that country, Chairman Vinson invites precisely the disaster which the State Department is working intelligently to avoid. Statesmanship everywhere recognizes that the will to peace is the most vital concern of a disordered world and that neither naval limitation treaties nor fixed ratios can secure peace if irresponsible threats are to be the order of the day.

Fortunately the making of policy in Great Britain and in the United States does not at this juncture reside with those who see in a failure of fixed ratio agreements an opportunity for their own aggrandizement.

Tobey Becomes Tradition.

In another week the Wendel mansion on Fifth avenue will be but a tradition. By the end of that time the wreckers will have finished their job and nothing but legend will remain of the faded vault that once contained that strange and somber family. The tyrannical complexes of the only son and the miserly habits of the six sisters now exist only in newspaper morgues. Tobey, the puny poodle, frisks no more except in doggy anecdotes.

The space once occupied by the shuttered, gas-lit house, and the tiny plot of ground where the little white dog played, is to be replaced by a 5 and 10 cent emporium. In a way, this is an Americanization of a strange and hostile territory. The old gives way to the new.

Gas jets are to be replaced by the glare of electric lights and neon signs. The carved oak staircase will give way to a plainer, more substantial passageway down which hundreds of feet will descend daily in a quest for kitchen utensils and household necessities. The gloomy old grandfather's clock must yield to a less dependable crop of Mickey Mouse wrist watches. George Washington Crossing the Delaware for 10 cents threatens to obscure the memory of artistic masterpieces which used to frown down on the parsimony of the Wendel brood. Frankly inviting windows entice a public where heretofore closed shutters discouraged all visitors. Even Tobey will find his tiny counterpart in hundreds of white, woolly pups with bead eyes and flannel tongues.

The passing of old things invariably calls for a sigh of sentiment. But when stingy solemnity is replaced by happiness on sale for a dime, surely it is not regrettable that the symbol of the wealthy yet impoverished Wendels should fall before a crew of healthy wreckers.

Small But Significant.

The $10,000,000 loan which Finland has just placed in the United States is small, but its importance is much greater than the sum involved.

In the first place, the loan calls attention to the fact that Finland is the only war debtor that has made payments in full to the United States. Thus she has escaped the ban upon flotations of government loans by defaulters, imposed by the Johnson Act. This praiseworthy record doubtless contributed somewhat to the favorable reception accorded the offering, but that is by no means a sufficient explanation. If Finland were not otherwise a good credit risk, the wary American investor would not be disposed to hazard his cash by purchasing Finnish promises to pay.

Probably the chief significance of the loan lies in the evidence afforded of a revival of interest in the foreign loan market. Apart from a Canadian refunding issue and a small amount of short-term notes, not a single foreign offering was included in the list of new capital issues for the first ten months of this year. Recently, however, business men and bankers have been inclined to stress the value of foreign lending as a means of reviving foreign trade and enabling undeveloped countries, poor in capital, to obtain funds with which to purchase the surplus of other nations. There has also been a good deal of emphasis placed upon the danger of exaggerating the extent of the losses suffered by holders of foreign securities.

Although the Securities Act interposes certain obstacles to a revival of foreign lending, the timidity of the investor, chastened by past experience, probably provides the chief explanation of the absence of offerings. Reports that the Finnish loan has brought a large number of small orders from individuals is, therefore, a welcome sign that the public is recovering rational investment confidence, and is ready to show greater interest in high-grade foreign offerings.

It is quite unlikely that we shall witness any sudden or pronounced increases in foreign loan flotations. It is highly desirable, however, that judicious lending of capital abroad as well as at home should be encouraged. Otherwise the contraction of foreign trade which followed a cessation of lending will persist. As the London Economist stated recently, without international lending, it is impossible to restore normality to the world's trading and financial relations.

An Unfair Approach.

Washington's reaction to President Roosevelt's proposed study of municipal tax rates, as a guide to the fiscal relations between the Federal and District governments, will be a keen disappointment. There will be some gratification, of course, that the President is looking into this muddled problem. But the approach he has chosen offers no hope of a lasting solution.

The President is obviously dissatisfied, as any impartial observer must be, with the haphazard financial relations now existing between the Government and the Capital City. His desire to end that anomalous situation is shared by every resident and friend of the District. But when he proposes a survey of taxes in cities of comparable size to find a measuring stick for local levies he ignores the crux of the issue. It does not appear that such a study would add anything to the similar investigations made in recent years.

Other cities the size of Washington may be paying higher or lower taxes. Regardless of what the survey might show, it would have no bearing whatever upon an equitable distribution of the costs of maintaining the Nation's Capital. Most American cities are overburdened with debts which require a large share of their budgets for interest. To apply their tax rates to Washington, which has no debt (except the minor sums borrowed from the PWA), would be palpably unfair. Some of their governments may be grossly inefficient. Can Washington's disfranchised taxpayers be asked to pay the same rates that are required to support political machines in other municipalities?

No reasonable basis for comparison of tax rates here and in other cities exists. Suppose that the local taxes should be adjusted to the average for the municipalities to be surveyed by Treasury experts. If that rate should bring increased returns, Congress might say the District no longer needs a Federal contribution. Accordingly the budget might be held at its present subsistence level and the new revenue used to support Federal institutions located here. In the meantime our schools, libraries, recreational facilities would be neglected without thought of comparing them with similar advantages offered by other cities.

When these realities are considered, it is not difficult to see that the proposed survey may become actually detrimental to Washington as a community. It would put the whole problem of fiscal relations upon a superficial basis, and there is danger that it would thwart the more substantial movement toward isolation of those items in the local budget which are proper charges against the Nation as a whole.

For Men Only.

Considerable excitement is being manifest in New York over the opening of the new bar, for men only, in the Waldorf Hotel. Ever since the return of Bacchus to Broadway a year ago many a salty tear has been wept into martinis by crusty old individuals who recall somewhat sentimentally the glory that was the old Waldorf bar.

There, they kept saying in defiantly loud tones calculated to squelch whatever female might be standing by, a man might drink like a man. It was, of course, before the era of the speakeasy and The New Yorker, before every bar in town was lushly decorated with modernistic designs and patronized as well by ladies as by men. During prohibition, mixed drinking became the vogue, and even the sawdusted beer bars of Seventh avenue were eventually forced to accept the patronage of women.

But there always remained those stanch individualists who insisted that silk stockings and brass rails do not go together. This undercurrent of dissent has at last been heard, and the old glories of manly bibulence are on their way back. This, however, is only in New York. In Washington there are no bars, except adjacent to the kitchen sink, and where one drinks one does so in the atmosphere of hypocritical prohibition.

Washington's hidden bars, lurking in the dark recesses of the back room and with the bartender hidden like some criminal, are less to be admired in their furtiveness than the honest bars, for men only, that repeal is returning to New York.

Peace In Sight?

The forced resignation of the President of Bolivia following a recent severe defeat of the Bolivian forces suggests that the end of the prolonged struggle between that country and Paraguay may now be in sight. The quarrel between these two states has lasted for six years and actual warfare, which has cost the lives of 80,000 men, has been in progress for over two years. Both countries have been bled white and civil disorders, such as the present Bolivian coup d'etat, are significant evidence of growing unrest among the masses of the people.

Even if the compulsory retirement of the president indicates, as some commentators surmise, that the army heads are resolved to prolong the war and prosecute it more ruthlessly, the overthrow at least shows that those in authority are no longer able to agree upon the best policy to pursue. That strongly suggests that the people are weary of war and can not be depended upon to follow aggressive leadership.

Regardless of what turn events in Bolivia may take, it appears to be an opportune moment for the League of Nations to again urge acceptance of its peace plans with a view to bringing this mutually destructive and senseless war to a speedy end.

The Report On Recreation.

Several issues in addition to the establishment of a unified recreation system for the District arise out of the excellent report on this subject by the National Recreation Association. Coordination of playgrounds and similar facilities must be studied in its relation to the proposed reorganization of the District government. Likewise this coordination has a vital bearing upon the relationships between the local government and Congress, and between the Commissioners and the School Board.

Apparently for this reason the association submitted four different plans instead of one. Its findings leave no question as to the desirability of bringing all recreational activities under a single control body. But because of the delicate nature of allied problems the report is devoted largely to an objective discussion of the District's needs and the various feasible means of attaining them.

One glance at the hit-or-miss system now functioning is sufficient to illustrate the need for sweeping changes. Responsibility for providing recreation in Washington is divided among the Office of National Parks (a Federal body), the Playground Department (a District agency) and the Community Center Department (a unit of the school system). With this set-up, three separate budgets must be prepared, three different organizations must be maintained, conflicting plans are carried out and only part of the community's recreational facilities are used. The result is waste of funds, inconvenience to the public, confusion of authority and an absence of executive leadership in the recreational field.

Every one interested in this field recognizes the urgent need for coordination. In working toward that end, however, both tact and patience will be necessary to avoid disruption of the limited service that is now being rendered. Every decision should be made with the welfare of District residents in mind. If this objective, as suggested by the association, is rigidly preserved it should not be difficult to mold the existing organizations into a permanent recreational system that would serve the entire community.

While the association submits four different plans, it offers a choice between only two major alternatives—Federal control or District control. A recreation department under the Office of National Capital Parks and the Board of Education would mean continuation of control by a Federal bureau, with financing chiefly from local taxes. This seems to be out of harmony with the association's insistence that "the people of any city should feel that their recreation system belongs to them in the fullest possible sense." The same objection may be raised to a commission appointed directly by the President.

Valid criticism may also be directed against the choice of a recreation agency by the Commissioners, because many of the facilities it would control belong to the Federal Government and because the Capital's park system extends beyond the District. Moreover, any plan that will adequately serve the needs of children must be closely associated with our independent schools system.

It appears, however, that these administrative difficulties could be overcome, as the association suggests, by giving the National Capital Parks Office, the Board of Education and the District government representation on a local commission composed chiefly of outstanding Washington citizens who would have the interests of the people at heart. Underneath the mass of detail presented this conclusion seems to represent the final judgment of the experts who directed this comprehensive and valuable study.

The League Is Useful.

(From the St. Louis Post Dispatch.)

In restless days like these, when much is heard of the impotence of the League of Nations, it is heartening to find resort being made to its functions in a situation of dangerous potentialities. We refer to the Yugoslavian government's action in referring to the league its charges that the conspiracy culminating in King Alexander's assassination was hatched in Hungary; that the Hungarian government gave hospitality to alleged terrorist refugees from Yugoslavia, and permitted the band to perfect its organization and drill its members in a camp near the border.

It was from closely similar circumstances that the World War arose. Austria called the Serbian government to account for the murder of the archduke. There was no League of Nations in 1914, so a series of ultimatums, which Serbia found it impossible to fulfill, was dispatched by Austria. It can not be said, of course, that league intervention would have averted the war. But it is certain that cool deliberation by an international assemblage is far better than direct exchanges between the nations concerned at a time when both are in a heated state.

Old Age Pensions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Reference is made to Mr. Henry Ware Allen's letter in your issue of November 24 commenting on the Townsend old age pension proposal.

While there should be some provision made for the support of the indigent and aged by the Federal or State Government, I am in agreement with Mr. Allen that the amount proposed ($200 each per month) is excessive and prohibitive. If Mr. Townsend will amend or modify his proposal to $50 or $75 per month, each with the same stipulations, it is highly improbable that more than 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 would accept such a proposition under its provisions. Yet at that it would give relief, directly and indirectly, to at least 10,000,000 of those unemployed and in distress.

In addition to its humanitarian aspects, its circulating features would be inestimable to our economic recovery. The recipients and beneficiaries would be constantly changing and in this way every niche and corner in each State would be benefited when and where needed. Pensions for the aged, and especially the economically made derelicts, is the sanest and most humane plan of relief ever suggested by civilization, and the spontaneous growth of the movement is evidence of its unselfishness and nonsectarianism.

Undoubtedly some plan along this line will eventually be made universal. Dr. Osler's prescription would be preferable to a continuance of the status quo.

"Man Preys Upon Them All."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Poor old Bushmaster! Only a snake, and of course we all hate and despise snakes. But with enough intelligence and courage and resolution finally to thwart the cruel will of the Lords of Creation that dragged him here from his native habitat and to commit suicide by slow starvation rather than endure an existence of a life sentence of solitary captivity.

Man has been given dominion over all other creatures on earth and as your correspondent, Marie Gunderson, points out, how shamefully and in how many myriad forms of ingenious cruelty he abuses it.

To gratify his vanity, he shuts liberty-loving creatures up behind bars that he may stare at them, or lashes them into going through tricks on a stage.

In a thousand horrid and appalling forms of "sport," from rodeo to cockfighting to fox-hunting, he organizes elaborate spectacles for the torment and killing of helpless and stricken victims. He eggs on and trains one unfortunate animal to torture another.

In exact truth it may be stated that every jungle creature preys upon some other creature but man preys upon them all.

How long will it be before man realizes the terrible karmic debt that he is storing up for himself by his myriad forms of active cruelty or passive neglect practiced upon defenseless creatures dependent upon his mercy, for which one day he will inevitably, through his own suffering, have to atone?

No Place To Park.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I notice with interest that new parking regulations are proposed for the District and the statement that some 7,000 cars will have to find new parking spaces.

I wish more cars had to find new parking spaces. It is with great difficulty that I can find one for my car anywhere downtown. I can't find one in the daytime within two or three blocks of the Army and Navy Club. I can't find one in front of my home in H street northwest in the daytime and rarely at night. I see no reason why others should have the benefit of street parking at my expense.

Seriously, I think street parking should be greatly curtailed, if not entirely abolished, during certain hours. Many of the streets are narrow enough anyway; to permit two lines of parked cars in these narrow streets adds greatly to the difficulty of driving. I doubt if immediate relief can be had. The development of private parking spaces should be encouraged, and the authorities should slowly, but progressively, place greater restriction on street parking. J. W. M.

Cooperation Proffered.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I extend through you to Mrs. Vitray the sincerest thanks of this society for her most instructive and enjoyable address at the Shoreham Hotel last week. Her election as honorary member of our club is eloquent evidence of our appreciation.

It is my hope that your paper may help encourage local fiction writers by occasionally allotting space for prize stories by members of our Free Lance Society, and perhaps by adding a daily story bought locally. Please let me assure you of the earnest proffered cooperation of our club in such an undertaking.

Will-O'-The-Wisps In Foreign Trade.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with great interest the article of Mr. Taraknath Das on India in the Sunday Post of November 18. No one can quarrel with the fundamental thesis of the article: That the United States needs outlets for foreign trade for renewed prosperity and that British India is a great potential market. That may be granted.

We have always bought more goods in India than we have sold there. For the ten years, 1921-1930, our exports to India aggregated $458,500,000 as against imports of $1,229,445,000, so that there should be some possibilities of increasing our exports to that great country and such possibilities should not be neglected. It seems to me, however, that Mr. Das is somewhat overenthusiastic and I beg to submit a few observations as a supplement to his excellent article.

It should be noted that the bulk of international trading is done by Europeans and their descendants in other parts of the world. The non-European peoples are not traders. Much of their foreign trade is done under compulsion and the rest is due to sheer necessity. In proportion to its vast population the foreign trade of India has always been insignificant.

In 1929, the last year of prosperity, the value of Indian imports reached the respectable amount of 907,436,000 gold dollars, but that was only $2.62 per capita. In the last fiscal year ended June 30, Indian imports dropped to $273,909,000, or less than 78 cents per capita. Mr. Das thinks it would be great for us "if the Indian people, on the average and per capita, used only $1 worth of American goods a year." That is true—but then they would have to buy everything in this country, and that is hardly to be expected.

Indian trade may expand some day, provided the purchasing power of the people shall have been augmented by an increased production and the people's will to buy foreign goods stimulated. Whether or when these two conditions will be fulfilled is something that can not be foretold.

We should not neglect the great market of India. For the present, however, that market is great only in its potentialities. Just now, it seems to me, our manufacturers and our statesmen might do better by seeking real markets nearer home.

Canada, a neighbor of ours, with a population of only 10,000,000, has a larger foreign trade than India with a population 35 times as large, buys ten times as much from us, and were it not for the tariff wall, would buy and sell much more. British Oceania—that is, Australia and New Zealand—with a population of less than 8,000,000, also has a larger foreign trade than India, and likewise buys more than India.

So let us not neglect the potential market of India—but let us also pay a little more attention to the real markets that are within easy reach and where our trade can run into the billions. Otherwise our striving for foreign markets will be something like chasing the will-o'-the-wisp. JAMES J. KING.

As Others See It

NRA on Convict-Made Goods.

The Cotton Garment Code Authority has asked NRA to stop the use of the Blue Eagle on garments made by convicts.

Do convicts enjoy all the blessings that are symbolized by the Blue Eagle? Do they receive wages adjusted to the minimums prescribed by the codes of the trades in which they work? Are their hours regulated according to the make-more-leisure philosophy that underlies those documents so bewilderingly to craftsmen in other callings? Do they share the inestimable privilege of collective bargaining? Do they enroll in company union or do they unite in independent unions? What would the American Federation of Labor say to a delegate from Sing Sing local who applied for admission to its councils? Has the federation modified its stand on prison-made goods? If prison-made goods are entitled to display the Blue Eagle, what becomes of the statutes that bar those goods from competition with goods made by workers not in prison?

The Post Impressionist

"Twinkle, Twinkle!"

Post Office, Friday.

"UNLUCKY diamonds?" The Column's gem-expert echoed our question. "Did you ever hear of a famous diamond that was lucky?"

He recited a list like the catalogue of mystery-stories in a library: The Braganza of Abaite, Great Mogul, Star of the South, Raulconda, Tavernier Blue, Rio das Velhas, Green Brilliant, Polar Star, Sea of Glory.

"Unlucky diamonds" laughed the expert. "You ought to know the records of those stones!"

* * *

"The Turkey I," he continued, "created a reign of terror. There is scarcely one pleasant thought associated with the Ahmedabab. The Moon of the Mountains was discovered by an Afghan and a foreign prospector. They were murdered for it by three brothers. Then one of those brothers murdered the other two—and was soon murdered, of course for that diamond, by his son-in-law.

* * *

"Take the Regent diamond. Lots of people have tried to. Some succeeded; the latest attempt made news not long ago.

"A slave found it in the Parteal Mines—1701. It weighed 410 carats, uncut. He hid it in a hole drilled in his leg, smuggled it to the coast, boarded an English barque. But he showed the stone to the skipper. That hardy seaman threw him overboard, sold the jewel to Gov. Pitt, of Fort St. George, went on a spree, got the D. T.'s, and hanged himself.

"The governor paid 500 pounds to have the diamond cut in London. Cleavage and dust were worth about £8,000. He carried it on his person, never slept two successive nights in the same house. Finally he did sell it, on the installment-plan, to the French Regent for Louis XV and founded the fortunes of the family that produced the Earl of Chatham and William Pitt.

"You might say he wasn't so unlucky! But you know the story of Louis XV and Louis XVI! Besides, that stone was twice stolen, and its royal owners were always having to pawn it. Napoleon hocked it to the Dutch Government, got it back and wore it in his sword-grip—probably at Waterloo.

* * *

Said our expert:

"The imperial Hapsburgs' bad luck began shortly after they got the Florentine Diamond.

"It was over 139 carats, cut in nine surfaces. It first appeared in the Fifteenth Century, with Burgundian Charles the Bold as owner. He thought it was lucky. It didn't bring him luck at the Battle of Morat, though, where the Bernese licked him.

"A peasant picked it up, after the show—sold the 'pretty piece of glass' for a florin to Bartholomew May, of Berne, who got a fortune for it from Ludovico Moro Sforza. That's how it reached the Medici Treasury at Florence and acquired its name.

"When Francis Stephen, of Lorraine, traded Lorraine for the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, the Florentine Diamond was thrown in for good measure. He married Austrian Maria Theresa, the jewel was set into the crown of the Hapsburgs—and the Hapsburgs' troubles started."

* * *

Our expert went on:

"Perhaps the greatest diamond connoisseur among modern royalty was the Empress Eugenie, Napoleon III's wife, whose misfortunes have become proverbial. She loved diamonds for their show-qualities, of course. Of course, too, she had a lot of them. But she really knew diamonds. She was almost an authority on them. And one of the greatest diamonds was owned by her, named for her—and went nobody knows where.

"It was the Eugenie.

* * *

"There was a perfect stone! It weighed 51 carats—oval and blunt at one end. It came to France from Russia.

"It had been Catherine II's out there—Catherine the Great; the Catherine the movies have lately twice discovered. She gave it to her greatest favorite, Potemkin. From him it descended to a grandneice.

* * *

"Louis Napoleon bought it as a wedding present for Eugenie. She named it after herself and wore it as long as her husband wore his crown. She lost it when he lost everything else.

* * *

"Well, the Eugenie was sold into India—for a lac and a half of rupees: say 15,000 pounds—to the Gaikwar, of Baroda. He was the potentate who was accused of trying to murder the British Resident, Col. Phayre, by slow poison with gold dust—must have hated the Colonel a good deal! Anyway, the Gaikwar got off through a jury-disagreement, but somehow all his jewels disappeared immediately after the trial—the Eugenie among them . . .

* * *

"What's that? Lawyers' fees?

"I don't know. But the Eugenie's never since been seen.

* * *

"Unlucky diamonds!" our expert concluded. "You'll notice that the most unlucky ones are the big ones. There's more than superstition in that: there's logic."

Five Indictments of Our Cuban Policy

Rule of Mendieta, Welles' Choice, Called Shocking; Will Grow Worse, Shaw Believes.

We print below the second of a series of three critical articles on the Administration's Cuban policy, written for The Post by Paul Vanorden Shaw, well known as an authority on Latin-American relations. Without subscribing to all of Mr. Shaw's contentions on this complicated subject, we believe that the case which he presents is both informative and significant, meriting attentive public consideration.

By Paul Vanorden Shaw.

ON January 18, 1934, when Carlos Mendieta became the provisional president of Cuba, all the cards were stacked in his favor. They were also admirably arranged for the purposes of Mr. Sumner Welles who had just returned from Havana to reassume the post of Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin-American affairs. Mr. Welles had now an ideal opportunity to test his theories and to put into practice his plans for the salvation of Cuba.

Carlos Mendieta was honest, one of the most popular leaders in Cuba, a conservative liberal mindful of foreign interests, a lover of order, willing to follow the suggestions of the American State Department and Ambassador. He was promised, and given, the active cooperation of most Cuban parties and he had the full support of Col. Batista and his army. Mendieta soon formed a coalition or concentration cabinet and promised to prepare the stage for the election of a constituent assembly which should revise the constitution and presumably select a constitutional president as well.

This government suited Mr. Welles so admirably that he recognized it in less than five days and then proceeded post-haste to administer shot after shot of adrenalin to keep it alive, strong and powerful. Mr. Welles has done more for Cuba than any other previous American official; in fact he could hardly have done more for Cuba had he been President of Cuba himself. In less than three weeks the United States had agreed to admit Cuban rum without quota trammels. Under the Costigan-Jones Bill, perhaps to the deterriment of Puerto Rico, Cuba was given an enviable quota of sugar. And the Second Import-Export Bank extended a credit of $4,000,000 to the island republic for the purchase of silver.

Then, on May 29, the United States abrogated the Platt amendment and substituted a new treaty for the permanent treaty of 1903. This eliminated, at one stroke the greatest cause of ill will between Cuba and the United States and one of the greatest obstacles to inter-American solidarity. Nothing better could have been devised to increase the popularity and the hold of President Mendieta than this act. Lastly, on August 24 came the biggest boost of all—the trade agreement. Thus, Mr. Welles has done everything within his power, according to his lights, to solve the Cuban riddle.

* * * *

BUT an examination of more than 300 newspapers and many more clippings which record the daily events of Mendieta's regime from his accession in January to the present brings to light a tale that is nothing less than ghastly and seemingly growing worse. As even the casual newspaper headline reader cannot have escaped the steady stream of shocking items it will suffice to summarize the main events and trends under Mendieta which they reveal.

First, Strikes—General, partial, national and local strikes have not lessened under the Mendieta regime. There have been strikes for pay and against pay increases (mirabile dictu); strikes of public officials; of telephone, post office and railroad employes. Almost every day there has been either a strike, the ending of a strike or the threat of a strike. Cuba has experienced in these ten months taxi-less, mail-less and light-less days. There have been strikes in factories, farms and pharmacies and even of doctors.

Relentlessly, President Mendieta and Col. Batista have sought to keep order. They have used government strike breakers backed by soldiers. This is the Mendieta or Batista way of stopping labor unrest: shooting, arrests, imprisonments. And even mutilations of the Machado type have been reported.

Second, Cabinet Crises.—One by one all the parties which joined President Mendieta have severed all connection with his regime. He lost the support of the A. B. C. after the parade in which 14 men and women were killed and more than 80 were wounded by machine gun fire. This was when the 30,000 Abecedarios paraded through Havana to reveal their strength, to protest against the swing to the right of Mendieta and against the rise of Col. Batista into the position of "lord high executioner" of Cuba.

President Mendieta has lost the Graucistas, the Menocalistas and the Marianistas. Today, he is supported only by the remnants of his own party, the Union Nacional, by Batista and by the American State Department and foreign interests. He has less support than Grau had at the end of his regime. Today Cuba resembles the Cuba of Machado.

* * * *

THIRD, Bombs and Terrorism.—This condition hardly needs comment. Bombs are now reckoned by the dozens. Shootings are frequent. Nights and days are punctuated by explosions which, if they do not always cause damage, are at least symptomatic of the underlying situation and revelatory of the fact that none of the measures of President Mendieta and Secretary Welles have gone to the bottom of the troubles of Cuba. Bombing and terrorism are not normal, even in Cuba. They reveal despair and they create an atmosphere where more terror is bred.

Fourth, Insecurity of Life.—If an election was the aim of Secretary Welles and of President Mendieta and if this is the goal towards which all their policies and practices have been pointed, nothing is more pathetically suggestive of the true state of affairs in Cuba today than the recent appeal of President Mendieta addressed to former Presidents Menocal and Grau and to former Secretary of Finance, Dr. Joaquin Martinez Saenz leader of the A. B. C. The President of Cuba asked them to bury their hatchets amongst themselves and with him and to cooperate in the holding of an election, first scheduled for December 31, but now postponed until March of next year.

This appeal to important Cuban leaders, one of whom was a cabinet officer of Mendieta, was not sent to their homes in Havana, but went by cable to their asylums in Miami and in New York City, whither all three had fled in the interests of their "health." One of these gentlemen has found that the long hand of terrorism reaches even the United States.

* * * *

FIFTH, the Army—Today there is only one group which feels somewhat secure in Cuba. It is the army, commanded by the former Sergt. Fulgencio Batista. While Mandieta has swung from left to right and lost all his support, while institutions have crumbled, while terrorism has continued unabated and while people are suffering as never before and while the process known as the "atomization" of Cuba goes on, the army has grown in numbers, in power and prestige. Today Batista rules Cuba. When a cabinet crisis threatens, President Mendieta consults the colonel. Recently Col. Batista called to his headquarters at Camp Columbia former President Menocal, and it is thither that all steps turn when Cuban statesmen and politicians wish to make a move. Batista's attitude must be known beforehand. Authentic reports have it that even the American Ambassador has established more than official relations with the colonel and that he rides with him frequently at Camp Columbia.

The meaning of the growth of the power of the army in Cuba was recently brought out by a distinguished former member of the Mendieta cabinet speaking in New York. An army developed to influence political processes needs an unpopular government as its spearhead. It is axiomatic and obvious that a popular government needs no military support. Such a government rides easily on the shoulders of popular approval and is carried by its own success.

$130,884 Estate Left By Custer's Widow

Government Is Bequeathed Historic Documents.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Mrs. Elizabeth Bacon Custer, widow of Gen. George A. Custer, left an estate which yesterday showed a balance of $130,884.43 in an accounting filed in surrogates court by City Bank Farmers Trust Co., administrator. Mrs. Custer died April 4, 1933, at the age of 91.

The accounting covered the period from her death to April 30, this year.

Mrs. Custer bequeathed to the Government various commissions of her husband to ranks in the United States Army. Some of these were signed by Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson. Among these bequests was a piece of toweling used as a flag of truce by the Confederate forces when Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered at Appomattax.

Portraits and photographs of Gen. Custer, his arms, accoutrements, uniforms, souvenirs of war and the frontier, books and trophies of the chase were left by the will to a public museum which is to be erected on the battlefield of the Little Big Horn, Montana.

A Canadian "Marina" Born at Nuptial Hour

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Nov. 29 (AP). A baby girl was born in this northern Ontario mining camp at 5 a. m. today, while many residents were tuning in on the wedding of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina in London.

She will be named Margaret Marina McDonald, in honor of Kent's bride. Her father, John McDonald, is a miner.

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Funniest Thing

SAVANNAH, Ga.—Crazy Joe was the funniest thing we ever had in this town. Gosh, but he was funny. He had a great big, egg-shaped head, eyes that almost popped out of his head and when he walked his left foot would point due west while he was proceeding north.

BARGERON

We were always playing tricks on him because he was the funniest thing. One time we all put on sheets and made like we were the Ku Klux Klan and that we were going to lynch Crazy Joe. Gosh, it was funny. We put a rope around his neck and threw it over the limb of the tree and let his body suspend until he was blue in the face. You would have died if you could have seen his expression. We almost scared him to death.

* * * *

One of the craziest things Crazy Joe would do was to take a position in front of the school three times a day and escort the little tots back and forth across the street. For some reason or another they sort of liked Crazy Joe, and one time, when he was hit by an automobile, they went to see him in the hospital and asked: "How are you getting along, Crazy Joe?" Gosh! the little tots were about as crazy as Crazy Joe.

Crazy Joe was deathly afraid of Big Bill Benson, the deputy sheriff. When Bill would come around Crazy Joe would run as fast as he could. And I'll tell you why he was this way.

One time the Widow Flanders who lives by herself up on top of the hill in that old ramshackly house was asleep and the house caught fire. Crazy Joe happened to be passing by and the crazy thing he is, he ran into the house after her. And in doing so he got badly burned.

As soon as he got well we cooked it up with Big Bill to arrest him on a charge of setting fire to the house. Gosh, it was funny. We would go down to the jail and yell: "Crazy Joe, what did you set fire to the Widow Flanders' house for?" You'd have died laughing the way he cried that by all that was good and holy he didn't do it. When we finally told Big Bill to let him out Crazy Joe ran for five blocks before he would stop. He was the funniest thing you ever saw.

* * * *

Really the most fun we ever had with Crazy Joe, though, was when we dressed up like witch-burners one Halloween night and told Crazy Joe we knew he was a witch so we had to burn him. Well sir, he was the funniest thing as we dragged him out to the woods to meet his doom with him pleading that he wasn't a witch at all.

We tied him to a tree and every now and then we would apply a lighted stick to his feet. "Confess," we demanded, "confess." And Crazy Joe would just keep pleading that he really hadn't done anything. He was the funniest thing you ever saw.

When the war came along Crazy Joe, being crazy as he was, tried his best to enlist. Finally they took him in a noncombatant service and when meningitis broke out in his camp he volunteered to wait on the patients. He was so crazy he didn't know it was a highly contagious disease. He was about as crazy as anybody you ever saw.

* * * *

I suppose you think nobody could have been as funny as I say Crazy Joe was. But really he was the funniest thing you ever saw.

One day when we hadn't had any fun with him for a long time we decided we would tell him Big Bill was after him again. This would always frighten him nearly to death.

This time we eased up to him and said: "Crazy Joe, you are a goner now. Big Bill is after you and he says he is determined to get you."

Just about that time old No. 29, the red ball freight train, was passing through town. Crazy Joe gave one yelp of fear and made a beeline for No. 29. It must have been going about 20 miles an hour as Crazy Joe reached it. He lurched at a side-bar, missed and fell under the train, and it cut him in two.

Gosh, you'd have simply doubled up with laughter if you had seen him. He was the funniest thing—the funniest thing you ever saw.

No End of Books

Souvenirs From the Old Smart Set Magazine, Haven for Some of Our Liveliest Writing.

By Theodore Hall.

MESSRS. Burton Rascoe and Groff Conklin put together this fine, fat book of 840 pages, calling it simply "The Smart Set Anthology" (Reynal & Hitchcock, $3.50). They might well have called it "We Are All Young Once: or A Sure Cure for Bashfulness."

Not that this collection of work from a hundred authors, most of it never reprinted since it appeared in the old Smart Set magazine under the editorships of Willard Huntington Wright (S. S. Van Dine) and H. L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan, lacks merit to our 1934 ears. Not that many of these pieces of prose and poetry, which were the rising voices of a whole new generation of writers, have lost freshness. But already that freshness has the sweet, souvenir quality of an old dance-card found in the bottom drawer. The reigns of Wright, 1911-14, and of Mencken and Nathan, 1914-24, were iconoclastic enough in their day. I hesitate to tell you how misty and dew-filled that day appears now.

* * * *

In 1921 they were still publishing Epigrams About Woman. Thus, by W. L. Werner: "It is characteristic of man's befuddled state of mind that he considers woman a peculiar and mysterious creature. He roams the world, creates beauty, uncovers knowledge, is worn by a thousand passions, and then he returns home to marvel at the simple creature that bears his children. . . . Only a peculiar, mysterious and complex mind could marvel so at simplicity."

In the same year W. B. Seabrook, now a doughty writer of hairy-chested travel tales, contributed a little allegorical fable—save the mark!—about an emperor of China who reduced his people's language to the single word "wow" so that peace would dwell among them.

Likewise in that same annus incredibilis, Lewis Mumford approached the theories of architecture, literature and machine technics by writing a short story about a prodigy. She was a young lady absolutely diamond-studded with talents and fame, and—yes, you are quite right—she married a plain man and wanted her child to be stupid.

In 1917 appeared a rather pretty sonnet about a young man in a subway who watched for a moment a beautiful girl—sample phrases, "fetid car" and "silken knees." It was pleasing enough, but no portent at all of the Thorne Smith who holds, I think, one little niche of immortality for his sublimely ridiculous extravaganzas.

Three years earlier was printed a little poem entitled "His Stenographer: As He Dictates to Her." Here is the first stanza:

Does she love you? Well, I wonder—
Married twenty years, they say!
You, so bald and fat and funny,
Grubbing like a mole for money!
Guess she likes to spend the plunder—
Gee—she knows the way!

If this were a "spot-passage" examination I shouldn't expect a single reader to guess that Harriet Monroe, whose famous little magazine, Poetry, has liked and printed the most modernistic of vers libre, wrote the above lines.

No, whatever else may recommend "The Smart Set Anthology," few books can exceed it as balm to the young writer who now squirms at finding his work a bit silly looking.

* * * *

But there is far more to the book than room for gentle twitting. For here is such an array of genuine and indicative "firsts" as has never before been gathered in one place.

Here are some notes on the private detective, written by Dashiell Hammett, when he was still an operative for Pinkerton's; an early, as yet not republished Aldous Huxley story, full of hints; a story by Sinclair Lewis in 1916, the first special use of his eye for Americana, also a "first"; a short tale by James Branch Cabell, which was the germ of "Jurgen"; Somerset Maugham's story, "Miss Thompson," from which "Rain" was adapted (republished); a 1902 story by O. Henry (one of the few examples from the Smart Set before Wright), which was almost the first he ever sold, and a story by James Joyce, which later appeared in "The Dubliners."

Indeed, the Smart Set under Wright was the first to print, on this side of the water, the work of Joyce, James Stephens, D. H. Lawrence, Wedekind, Schnitzler, Strindberg and D'Annunzio — some of which is here included.

* * * *

Wright is here with his famous "Los Angeles—The Chemically Pure" (which got him his job, and raised a furore) and Nathan with his gnomic sayings, part of "The American Credo," "Paris After 8:15," and a piece on criticism, yet there is not a line of Mencken. That is at Mencken's own wish — a point which Rascoe is at some pains to make clear, in his peppery and informative introduction, in words which Rascoe is the first to suspect may lead to a break in a beautiful friendship.

But through anyone who knew the old Smart Set may miss the gusty bludgeon of Mencken in these pages, the rest is here—fully and joyously, in the best anthology of the year.

Rep. Terry Will Urge Arkansas Power Plan

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 29 (AP).—Representative D. D. Terry, of Arkansas, plans to propose to Congress the establishment of an Arkansas Valley Authority similar to the Government project in Tennessee.

His plan would provide flood control, prevent erosion and develop power on the Arkansas and White Rivers. Terry's proposal is similar to that offered by Representative W. E. Disney, of Oklahoma, except that it would not emphasize river navigation on the Arkansas as does the Oklahoman's plan.

Curing the Deaf

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

ALTHOUGH enormous progress has been made in the treatment of eyes and in restoring sight to those who had lost it, many people believe that nothing can be done for deafness. And indeed what a blessing it would be if, the moment one's hearing began to fail, one could merely go to the proper store and buy a contrivance such as any optician can give you when you find it difficult to read small type, which difficulty generally first makes itself felt when you consult the telephone book and confuse the figure 3 with an 8.

* * * *

Well, deafness can not be cured so easily or so universally as that, but here is a little book by an expert, which shows what can be done. It is called "The Modern Conception of Deafness," is written by Dr. Harold Hays, and published by the Laryngoscope, St. Louis, Mo. Special chapters are contributed by well-known writers, among them being William McFee and Harris Taylor.

Mr. McFee's chapter is, as might be expected, a commentary on human nature. As he says himself, it is shot through with personal prejudices, which makes it all the more interesting, though perhaps not so universal a guide. I wish everyone would read it, for the good of one's own soul.

There are chapters on the treatment of deafness in adults, on that for children, on tests for hearing, on the anatomy of the ear, on the causes of deafness, on lip-reading, on the various machines and artifical aids, on fads and frauds, on the psychological and sociological problems of deafness, on the deaf-mute problem, and a very interesting chapter on overcoming handicaps in hearing. It is a book of 140 pages and small enough to be carried in the pocket.

Sound of Revelry By Night Follows Marina's Wedding

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—Old London Town gave itself over to high revelry tonight in celebration of the royal wedding.

Theaters, night clubs, restaurants and hotels in the fashionable West End were crowded, and elsewhere throughout the city proprietors of amusement and eating places reported that the hundreds of thousands who thronged the streets apparently were on a spending spree.

Meanwhile, a gigantic traffic jam spread over the city and all forms of transportation were forced to proceed with slowness and caution.

Bond street, regarded as the smartest center of all, was closed to vehicular traffic, and other streets were jammed from the almost unprecedented flow of vehicles and pedestrians.

The hold of the royal wedding on the popular imagination was demonstrated again tonight as up to a late hour thousands of people walked past the altar in Westminster Abbey where the marriage was solemnized today. Everything was left as it had been for the ceremony, and the spectators took a keen interest in all the details.

France Is Offered Wheat Export Plan

First Time Quota Tendered Her by Grain Parley.

Budapest, Nov. 29 (AP).—Representatives of six wheat exporting countries, meeting here, yesterday decided to grant France an export quota for 1934-1935, provided their respective governments approve.

The decision came after three hours of discussion, following adjournment of the full wheat conference yesterday.

Draft of the agreement, which American delegates described as "very complicated," was sent to the seven governments, including France, for approval. Meanwhile delegates refused to reveal the size of the quota offered France.

This was the first time an export quota had been offered France and it meant that other exporters, particularly Argentina and Canada which between them expected to get two-thirds of the total quota of 600,000,000 bushels, must take less.

Pump Priming May Be Next New Deal Move

By Elliott Thurston.

CLOSELY as President Roosevelt appears to have followed the advice of John Maynard Keynes, the New Deal has failed in one highly important particular to do what the British economist proposes. Despite enormous, if not profligate spending, the New Deal has never achieved the volume or kind of pump-priming expenditure which Keynes insists is necessary to start private enterprise going. This is not only the hub of the Keynes theory, but it raises a question beset by intense controversy.

The question stated simply is whether private initiative will resume by itself, or whether the very pump-priming expenditures will not so add to fears over budgetary unbalance as to discourage private enterprise. Economists are ranged on both sides of this issue. Both sides agree that Government pump-priming can be no more than a stimulant—that the pump-priming expenditure is futile unless business is ready to go on by itself after receiving the initial stimulus afforded by dispersing funds that are converted into purchases of durable goods and into spending money in the hands of workingmen.

Keynes and his disciple, Gov. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board, contend that Federal spending for direct relief is of slight value, if any, in priming the pump. That is, funds expended to maintain a bare subsistence go into consumption goods but are not translated into public works and other construction drawing upon heavy industry for materials and creating employment in that industry. They cite that while the New Deal has spent all too freely for direct relief, it has not succeeded in launching simultanously enough large public works projects to give heavy industry a real stimulus. The failure is due to a number of causes. For one thing PWA has functioned very slowly. It has been tied up in Governmental red tape of all sorts. It has had ample funds but the money has been dribbled out without providing one great, simultaneous push.

* * * *

THERE has been no sign that Mr. Ickes ever heard of the Keynes theory. In delivering what threatened to be a death blow to the Moffett housing program, Mr. Ickes was in fact striking down an expedient which Keynes highly praised. At all events, the New Deal for one reason or another has not yet put the Keynes pump-priming theory into practice. Whether it will do so remains to be seen.

So far as the budget is concerned, it would seem to be better to spend money trying the Keynes plan than to spend it for a direct relief, which has all the disadvantages of a dole in breaking down morale, for example, and none of the advantages of pump-priming. However, the vital point of controversy is over the actual and psychological effects of such a volume of pump-priming expenditure as the Keynes adherents consider necessary to achieve the desired result.

Keynes asserts flatly that private initiative will not resume by itself. "Business enterprise," he wrote in his pamphlet on "The Means to Prosperity," "will not seek to expand until after (italics) profits have begun to recover. Increased working capital will not be required until after (italics) output is increasing." In other words, he holds, apparently, that until Government expenditure has actually provided a profit for industry and a market for the products of industry, the operators of industry will not, of their own accord, expand their operations in anticipation of a market.

* * * *

AS Ralph Robey pointed out in his "Roosevelt versus Recovery," the pump-priming theory is by no means new. It had its first great publicity in this country in the Harding-Hoover studies of unemployment. But it was then conceived primarily as a means of providing employment during slump periods rather than as a means of stimulating inert, paralyzed industry. Mr. Robey, however, makes the classical case against the "public-works-spend-your-way-to-prosperity thesis." He concedes the initial impulse but sees no continuity of action—no transition from Government spending to private assumption of the initiative and the burden. "It acts as a stimulant to business," he contends, "only so long as the purchasing power is poured in, but no longer. "And," he argues, "it is a losing game." "Once the political fortune of the party in power becomes dependent upon maintaining a prosperity created in this way," he adds, "the end is national bankruptcy... It is the curse of dope, magnified a million times."

Without venturing to say which side is correct about it, the fact is that this is the vital controversy presented by the Keynes theory, and by the appointment of Mr. Eccles to head the reserve board. And unless business revival, upon its own initiative, settles the argument in advance, there is every reason to expect the New Deal to give heed to this essential part of the Keynes advice as it has to all other parts. The question at the moment is how much longer the New Deal will delay—waiting for business to go ahead on its own motion, regardless of the fog which still hangs over the horizon.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

After the Royal Wedding.

The Duke—Well, it was some wedding, wasn't it?

Marina—Wedding? I thought it was a general mobilization.

Duke—Some of the scenes certainly did look a lot like those war movies. Were you hurt?

Marina—No bride could go through all those ceremonies without being battered and bruised, but I'll be all right after a few months' rest. And you?

Duke—My nerves are all shot from those flashlight bombs, and I think I was stepped on by some general's horse. Otherwise I'll just need a casual looking over by my physician. You're limping, my dear.

Marina—In the general confusion, I suppose.

* * * *

Duke—You look awfully pale.

Marina—The effects of a wedding in our set are the same as a long sickness. It was really a cross between a durbar, a national uprising and the game you call rugby.

Duke—Righto! We really should have used "doubles," like they do in the pictures.

Marina—Why didn't we think of that? In anything as hazardous as a royal wedding the principals shouldn't be obliged to endure the strain.

* * * *

Duke—I don't know which was the greater ordeal, the wedding or the rehearsals.

Marina (wearily)—I forget which was which!

* * * *

Duke—Personally I minded the receptions more than the wedding.

Marina—Frightfully stiff, weren't they, George? And one shouldn't be forced to look at so many funny looking diplomats en masse.

Duke (yanking off his stiff collar)—Thank heaven, I can get out of this thing and feel comfortable for the first time in weeks.

Marina—And will I feel good when I get out of these wedding gowns! Oh, boy!

* * * *

Duke—Did you see all those wedding presents?

Marina—It was like going through the museum. What do you suppose they think we will do with all those clocks?

Duke—I'm afraid some of them will never get wound?

Marina—I'm afraid some of them will!

* * * *

Duke—Everybody we knew sent us something we didn't need. It was splendid of them.

Marina—It will take years to unpack all the dishes and silverware, honey.

Duke—How many pianos did we get?

Duke—Well, I begin to understand why my brother, the Prince of Wales, won't marry.

Marina—So do I!

Can You Remember?

Away back when those Big Three college bowls used to be filled for the big games?

Add similes: As uneasy as a mother whose boy is trying to make up his mind whether to play professional football or hockey.

The real heroes of that royal wedding are the boys who have to unpack all those presents without breaking anything.

The crush, the confusion and the military aspects of the George-Marina nuptials were such that Elmer Twitchell suggests a monument to the unknown usher.

Among life's major surprises is to have, as we did yesterday, an apparently young lady call up and say, "This is the back number department speaking"!!!

All Units of Corps Compete in Infantry Movement.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—B Company, of the Virginia Military Institute Corps of Cadets, won the inter-company competitive drill, it was announced today. Considerable interest in the drills, which are a monthly feature of the V. M. I. routine, is shown since the results mean points in the scoring for the Garnett-Andrews Cup, presented each year to the commander of the all-round company in the corps.

The drill featured infantry movements by all companies competing. The scores were as follows: B Company, 87.15 per cent; F Company, 86.03 per cent; C Company, 85.75 per cent; A Company, 83.98 per cent; D Company, 81.76 per cent; E Company, 78.48 per cent.

750 Britons Collapse During Bridal Parade

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—Great Britain's big royal wedding was not without its casualties. Ambulance men attended 750 cases along the wedding route where crowds were most densely packed.

Ten persons were taken to hospitals, but most of the other troubles were minor. Many women fainted. Two persons suffered fractured legs.

Officers to Take Oath.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Saturday will be oath-taking day at the Allegany Courthouse here. Most of the newly elected county officers will be sworn in.

County Officers Ready to Take Frederick Jobs

Officials to Be Inducted for Four-Year Terms Tomorrow.

—Frederick, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—The newly elected county officials—clerk of the court, sheriff, register of wills, judges of the orphans court, county commissioners, State's attorney and county surveyor—will be inducted into office Saturday for terms of four years. The term of Thomas A. Chapline, reelected county treasurer, does not expire until next July.

Eli G. Haugh, clerk of the court, will succeed himself; former Judge of the Orphans Court John Hershberger will succeed Melvin F. Shepley, register of wills; Sherman P. Bowers will succeed Walter E. Sinn, State's attorney; Lewis C. Etchison and C. Newton Thomas, reelected, and Samuel U. Gregg are the new judges of the orphans court; A. H. Derr, reelected, U. Grant Hooper and Jesse I. Renner will succeed County Commissioners Amon Burgee and John W. Holter, and Frank Rothenholfer will succeed W. Jarboe Grove, county surveyor.

New Appointments.

Interest centers in the new appointments. Mr. Hershberger, register of wills, announced that he will appoint D. Dorsey Etchison, member of the Frederick bar, as his chief deputy, and Rollins G. Atkinson and Oscar C. Sponseller will be the new office deputies; Sheriff Hiltner will appoint George Abrecht office deputy, and County Constable Charles W. Smith, this city, and Charles Crum, Woodsboro, riding deputies. No changes are scheduled in the clerk's office.

The most important appointments, under the county commissioners, will not be announced until the new officials are sworn in. About a dozen applicants are in the field for the post of chief clerk, which pays a salary of $1,800 per annum, and a number seek the superintendency of Monteveue Hospital, the county almshouse, which also carries a number of appointments, as well as assistant clerk and attorney to the commissioners. The term of Supervisor of Assessment Alfred G. Gaver does not expire until May. Mr. Gaver is a Democrat and will likely be succeeded by a Republican. Leslie N. Gaver, Middletown, defeated Republican candidate for register of wills, has been mentioned for assessor. It is expected that Mr. Derr, the reelected member of the commissioners, will be chosen president. The commissioners have had several conferences at which appointments have been discussed, but beyond the tentative selection of Mr. Derr as president, no definite action has been taken, it was said.

To Compile Budget.

The first work of the new county commissioners will be compiling the budget from which the tax rate is set. The budget must be completed by the latter part of December. Taxes are due January 1.

The commissioners, board of education and representatives of the teachers' association held a conference yesterday at which the appropriations for public schools were discussed. Emergency legislation enacted in 1933 by the General Assembly made a reduction in the salaries of teachers until September 1, 1935. Teachers desire their salary cuts restored and the teachers' association recommended that salaries be restored to the minimum scale prevailing from 1922 to 1932. Such action will automatically occur according to law as the term providing for the salary reduction expires next September. An additional $28,000 will be required to raise the salaries January 1. This means that $53,000 in addition to the $296,000 appropriated by the county in the last levy will be necessary to restore the salaries.

Both the new commissioners and board of education are reported to favor extending for future years the time limit of the emergency education appropriation enacted two years ago as the emergency appropriation represents a reduction of about 18 cents in the county tax rate. The school budget is being compiled and will be laid before the commissioners December 8.

Officials of Carroll Take Posts Tomorrow

Westminster, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—With the exception of George N. Fringer, State's attorney, the newly elected officials of Carroll County will be sworn in Saturday by Edwin M. Mellor, jr., clerk of the court.

Mr. Fringer will officially assume office on January 1. After Mr. Mellor has been administered the oath of office Saturday by Chief Judge Francis Neal Parke, the following officials will be sworn in by the clerk: County commissioners, Charles W. Melville, E. Edward Martin, Norman R. Hess, orphans court judges, J. Webster Ebaugh, Lewis E. Green, John H. Brown; sheriff, John A. Shipley, register of wills, Harry G. Berwager.

With the exception of Mr. Berwager, the new officials of Carroll County are Republicans. According to Republican Party leaders here, the only appointments decided on to date are those of A. Earl Shipley, attorney to the county commissioners, and Robert L. Shipley, Sykesville, chief deputy sheriff.

Mr. Shipley, at present, is acting State's attorney, during the absence of Theodore F. Brown, who has served as State's attorney since 1919, and now is vacationing in California.

Christmas Seal Drive Opened For Arlington

5,000 Contribute Stamps to Raise Funds for Tuberculosis War.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

With seals in the mails to 5,000 families, the annual tuberculosis Christmas seal sale was started in Arlington County yesterday under direction of Mrs. Myrtle Melnick, county chairman.

Mrs. R. N. Davis, public health nurse, said: "It should be looked upon as a great privilege to purchase and use the tuberculosis seals. I heartily indorse the use of the funds in the county."

Dr. P. M. Chichester, county health officer, declared he knew of no greater work being done in Arlington County than that which is made possible by the funds derived from the sale of seals.

"Illness follows a depression, and there is no disease that has any greater bearing on poverty than tuberculosis," he said. "I appeal to the ctiizens to purchase their seals from the organization in the county in order that the money they spend may be used to relieve suffering within the county."

A materially larger Red Cross membership in Arlington County than last year's is indicated by early returns on this year's roll call, George A. Collier, county chairman, said last night. Despite the larger enrollment, however, the 1935 quota of 1,500 members hardly will be reached unless final figures exceed present prospects. The closing date has been extended to tomorrow night to permit those desiring to join after November 30.

Miss Gertrude Smith, chairman of the Junior Red Cross, reports increased interest and larger contributions in the county schools. The schools of Arlington County are enrolled 100 per cent in the Junior Red Cross and have been quite active in the organization. More than 75 pairs of shoes and 15 pairs of glasses were purchased last year for children whose parents were unable to provide these necessities. The Juniors provided about 150 baskets at Christmas last year in addition to sending large baskets of clothing where they were needed to keep pupils in attendance at school.

Mrs. Ruby G. Simpson, member of the Arlington County school board, has been elected president of the School Trustees' Association of Virginia.

Mrs. Simpson, who for many years has taken an active part in the school work in Arlington County, is said to be the first woman in the State to be accorded this honor.

The following members of Arlington Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F., have been nominated as officers and will be balloted upon at the meeting to be held Tuesday, December 10, in the Odd Fellows Hall, at Clarendon.

For noble grand, Harvey Marcey; for vice grand, B. W. Chamberland; for recording secretary, H. W. Beattie; for financial secretary, J. W. Meyers; for degree director, W. S. Shanholtz; for master of robes, J. Banton, and trustee, Walter Huffman.

Thief Remembers The Golden Rule; Leaves a Turkey

"Well, it could have been worse," Charles Cumberland, a Fairfax County farmer living near Colvin Run, philosophized yesterday. "At least he left me one turkey."

Cumberland had six turkeys in his henhouse, fattening them up for Thanksgiving Day. Tuesday night the henhouse had company and the following morning only three turks were left.

Early yesterday the farmer was awakened by excited cackling. Taking up his shotgun—or was it fowling piece?—he reached the window in time to see a man rushing off with a gobbler under each arm. The resulting shotgun blast failed to find its mark.

So the Thanksgiving dawn broke on a solitary Cumberland turkey. A few hours later the holiday ax had ended its loneliness.

Baker Wooden, 38, colored, of Fairfax, Va., who was taken to the Georgetown Hospital by two colored men early yesterday suffering from a gunshot wound in the face, will be returned to Fairfax County to face larceny charges in connection with the case, said Sheriff E. P. Kirby, of Fairfax, yesterday.

The two colored men, Dave Wooden, of King's court northwest, and William Thompson, of the 2500 block of M street northwest, were arrested by the Seventh precinct after they had said that the injured man was shot accidentally at Seneca, Md.

Wooden's condition, with one eye reported destroyed, and head peppered with gunshot, was reported still serious at the hospital last night. The other two men also will be turned over today to Sheriff Kirby.

Duck Hunters at Last Have Something to Shoot.

Perryville, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Duck hunters on the Susquehanna River flats at last have something to shoot at.

Wild ducks have been brought into the shooting ground near here in greater numbers than at any time since the season opened. And bag limits, until now something of a rarity, are common for week-end sportsmen.

Until the grounds are covered with ice, it is expected redheads and canvasbacks will be available in sufficient quantities to satisfy the hunters. An abundance of wild celery on the flats is said to be drawing the ducks to the area to feed.

Woman Found In Coma Dies

Cerebral Hemorrhage Fatal to Miss Harding, 38, Autopsy Discloses.

Miss Mabel Harding, 38, who was found unconscious on the floor of her small home in the 1000 block of Second street northeast late Wednesday by police who battered down her door, died yesterday in Casualty Hospital.

After Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald performed an autopsy, he said death was due to a cerebral hemorrhage. Neighbors, missing Miss Harding, and worried because she failed to respond when they knocked at her door, called police Wednesday. Physicians at the hospital said she had been unconscious for several days.

According to Capt. Crandal Mackey, former Commonwealth's attorney for Arlington County, Miss Harding once was well-to-do, the pet of her grandmother, whose surname she adopted.

When her grandmother died, she inherited the large house in which the two had lived, but was unable to support herself. Her bank account was used up quickly, and she labored part-time as a public stenographer. Finally she purchased the small house in which she died.

Escape Periodic Upsets
By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets in time
It is foolish to suffer so when you can escape pain and discomfort by taking these tablets. To obtain best results, take them all through the month. In non-surgical cases they will help to correct the CAUSE of the disturbance.

MRS. ODILON LABBE

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets for painful periods and they helped me wonderfully. I used to feel very weak and had such awful pains that I couldn't stay up. I had to go to bed every month. I read about the Tablets in one of your booklets and I bought a bottle. They stopped the pain."

CATHERINE GRIBEL

"I am 25 years old. I suffered so with cramps that I thought I would go out of my mind. Finally my mother told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets. I can truly say that they helped me. I feel like a new person now and have no cramps to worry about."

Session Today To Speed Work On Health Post

Politics Will Be Banned in Selection of Fowler Successor.

Responsibility for selection of the man best fitted for the job of District health officer will be placed before a special committee at a meeting with the District Commissioners today.

Headed by Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, retired, as chairman, the committee was named recently by the Commissioners at the instance of Commissioner George E. Allen. The committee comprises representatives of the United States Public Health Service, District medical and dental societies, and university hospital and medical schools.

The meeting with the Commissioners today will be the first held by the committee. The meeting was called to "get the ball rolling," as Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen expressed it.

Politics are not to play any part in selection of the new health officer who will succeed into the position made vacant by the retirement of Dr. William C. Fowler, it was said. Dr. Fowler was appointed to the Health Department in 1894 and was department head since 1913. He retired because he has reached the mandatory retirement age of 70 years.

Politics Eliminated.

"The special committee was appointed to aid the Commissioners in finding the best man or men available for the post," Commissioner Allen said.

"The committee is to select the names of three men and submit them to the Commissioners. They are to be the very best men we can get from the Commissioners. All only instruction the committee is to get from the commissioners. All other conversations and instructions are to be subordinated to that major one.

"Just to dispose of the question of politics, let me say this: If there are two men of equal qualifications available for appointment and one is a resident of Washington and one resides elsewhere we are going to select the Washington resident.

"The meeting today was not designed to hurry the selection committee in any way. If they need two weeks or a month or more to find the right man the Commissioners will not hurry them. The primary thing is to find the right men for the post of health officer and assistant health officer."

Reorganization Plans.

The post of assistant health officer will become vacant on December 15 when the resignation of Dr. Edward J. Schwartz becomes effective. Dr. Schwartz gave no explanation of his reasons for resigning, an action which came as a surprise to District officials and others. It had been contemplated that Dr. Schwartz would head the Health Department after the retirement of Dr. Fowler, at least until a new head was finally chosen. Commissioner Allen said some other of the experienced Health Department officials would be named acting department head if the new head is not chosen before Dr. Schwartz leaves.

Possible reorganization of the department is to be undertaken by another special committee as soon as the new health officer is named, it was said. The question of reorganization was not undertaken first because it was desired to have the new department head as a member of the reorganization committee, Commissioner Allen said.

"The reorganization study," he said, "is not to be considered a reflection on any one in the department. I believe it is a good thing every now and then to have public agencies gone over by outsiders who are competent in their fields. The end of the long and very fine period of service given the people of the District by Dr. Fowler simply makes this an opportune time for undertaking the study of possible revision and improvement. The selection committee which will meet with the Commissioners today will be unhampered in their recommendations. The reorganization committee is going to have the same freedom of judgment."

Housing Show Stirs Capital, Officials Say

FHA Phone Lines Buzz With Inquiries on Repair Drive.

With scores of telephone inquiries being received at the Federal Housing Administration daily, officials of Washington's Better Housing Exposition yesterday saw interest in the show growing.

Apparently under the impression that the exposition is sponsored by the administration, persons desiring to know whether it is being staged and when, have kept the FHA lines busy.

Until Saturday, December 8, the exposition will be open to the public free of charge from 2 p. m. to 5 p. m. and from 7 to 9:30 p. m. It is being held in the bus center on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue between Sixth and Seventh streets northwest.

Officers of Capital civic organizations will be guests of honor at the exposition tonight, including the following presidents: Maurice R. Colbert, Exchange Club; T. J. Crowell, Civitan Club; Dr. Chester D. Swope, Rotary Club; Norman C. Kal, Advertising Club; Miss Alice Webster, Quota Club; Col. William H. McCarty, Cosmopolitan Club.

A band concert will be played by the Boys' Independent Band from a stand especially erected across the street from the exposition by the National Park and Planning Commission through arrangements with Albert Clyde-Burton.

U. S.-to-Japan Phones In Operation Dec. 7

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Direct telephone communication between the United States and Japan will be inaugurated on December 7, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. announced tonight, with service to the principal cities on the Island of Hondo, including Tokyo, Kyoto, Yokohama and Kobe.

The charge for a three-minute conversation between San Francisco and Tokyo will be $30.

West-Enders Would Upset Parking Plan

Protest to Commissioners at Session Today; Petitions Signed.

More than 100 business men of the West End of Washington signed their names Wednesday and yesterday to a petition denouncing the proposed winter parking ban as unfair and unnecessary.

The petition, circulated by members of the West End Citizens' Association, under the direction of A. C. Barber, secretary, has thus far been presented to business men only. Hundreds of signatures will be obtained from citizens without garage facilities, if necessary, said Mr. Barber, who intends to present the petition to the District Commissioners today.

"Business men on the west end of Pennsylvania avenue from Seventeenth street on will lose thousands of dollars of business from drive-in trade during the morning hours, if the ban goes into effect," said Mr. Barber.

He stated that much of the merchants' trade in the area comes from shopping motorists who purchase goods from 7 a. m. to 9:30 a. m. The parking ban would prohibit cars from parking on designated streets during the hours of 2 to 9 a. m.

The petition suggests that the parking ban be used in snowfall emergencies only, and be lifted when the streets are clean.

Mr. Barber said that a survey made last spring indicated that there are more automobiles and less garage facilities in the area than in any similar section of the city. He said there are sufficient garages for but one-fifth of the machines owned in the region.

Lotus Presents Sanford Revue First of Week

By Kay Ware.

Here's news, fresh from the Lotus. Bobby Sanford's Revue—remember them?—will start at the Lotus Monday. It's a large affair, songs, dances, choruses, and funny men. Incidentally, Mr. Sanford is the creator of the Hudson Show Boat, producer of many stage shows for Paramount, and the thought behind the production and staging of Joe Cook's "Fine and Dandy," and "Rain or Shine."

"We are here, Habana shouted, "We are here!" And with fluttering of palms, colorful greeting of Spanish posters on adobe walls, stuffed monkeys in trees, Habana opened its doors Wednesday night.

Dinner was at 8. Carnations for gentlemen, gardenias for ladies. You met your friends, danced to Moe Baer's superb music, listened to red-haired Jolly, watched Nadine and Girado's dancing.

And after it was all over, you made a mental date to go again.

Hi-Hat comes through with a new entertainer, Tommy Suiters, by name. Has been engaged by New York's bands, has sung over the air, on screen and stages. Is a tenor, and accompanies himself on a guitar. Has wide repertoire, and vocal range.

Starts vocalizing tomorrow. Plans to sing. "Stars Fell on Alabama," and "The West Virginia Hills."

Fenton Froom, singing at Willard's Bamboo Room, first wanted to sing in China. He traveled for several years in the Orient before landing with Johnny Slaughter's Band.

At the Variety Club Frolic, Ernestine Gardner, also with this musical group, attracted so much attention that it is possible that George Jessel, acting master of ceremonies, got a little green around the gills.

Hear the two some afternoon when you're feeling low. A good tonic.

What are these two scoops filtering around town? Just wondering. Perhaps Steve Cochran's big plan for the old Belasco, perhaps another Russian Club, Casino Russe; perhaps Steve's brother's place, perhaps De Sales Tavern. Somebody wanted to turn the Rialto into a night club, but couldn't because it has to be a movie theater.

Still wondering. And very curious.

Club Chantecler has a new atmosphere of hospitality; what with the cordial hostess, the soft tones of the organ, and the singing of John Shevlin.

Over with a bang, and turning people away—that's what happened at Alexandria's George Mason ballroom Wednesday night. Innkeeper Siegel was smiling and pleased, entertainers put their souls into their work, dinner was eaten by appreciative guests.

If you're up Connecticut avenue way, drop into Heigh-Ho and watch the Cansinos. They're wonderful. To some minds, they're more wonderful than Enters and Borgia. You ought to judge for yourself. Very expert, and sophisticated, are the Cansinos.

Speaking of Club Russe, it is opening Wednesday. Will be completely and authentically Russian, under the direction of M. Nemiroff, who has had experience in such matters in New York. Entertainers include the well-known pianist, Armand Faure, who has played with orchestras and in solo concerts in many cities; Felix Anstel, concert violinist; Lee Gould, a French disseuse, along the order of Cornelia Otis Skinner.

The caviar is from Astrakhan, where the best caviar is found; meat will be broiled and served on iron spikes in Russian fashion; tea hour will bring real samovars and chafing dishes to your table; Russian cigarettes are served; dancing goes on until wee hours.

Tango-Tiny hour at the Shoreham attracts those who dance a la Argentine, Berlin or Paris, and those who like to sit and smile at Tiny's songs. Says Tiny: "You see, I'm really the son of a noble European family. They think I'm street cleaning to find out the sanitary conditions in America. They're quite proud of me. They don't know what I'm really doing." This all in fun, and right in front of Ruth Barnard. Be it known that Tiny gets a tremendous kick out of singing in the Lounge—as big a kick as we get listening to him.

Da Costa and orchestra, all dressed up in black shirts and striped ties, play the best tangoes we's ever heard in this continental town. Carmencita and Rigo, from the ballroom, dropped in the other day and danced as guests.

Shoreham's ballroom: Carmencita and Rigo put on a smithy act, the girl is the mule, the man the blacksmith, the props, a tiny hammer. Ewen Hail, tenor, sings a la cowboy, Negro, modern crooner. Horton Spurr provides comedy relief, Betty Lukens, soft shoe, and other numbers. Extra: Cyrilla Adelaide Tuite, blonde soprano, joins orchestra, and shares honors with Barnee and Russ Cullen.

Shoreham had a dinner for "lonely souls" last night. Thanks for following up the hint.

Virginia Phone Probe To Follow Power Quiz

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—An investigation such as now is being made of electric power companies in Virginia will be made of telephone rates when the present studies are completed, says N. Lester Hooker, chairman of the State corporation commission.

He said the commission plans to bring the 1926 valuation of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. up to date and to review rates of all the telephone companies at the same time.

Post Toy Fund Aids Santa Claus In Cheering Hospital Children

This is one of the questions the Post Toy Fund is asking of generous-minded Washingtonians in its drive to secure toys enough to assure that there will be no toyless Christmas for any child in the National Capital.

Last year toys were sent to the Children's Hospital, where little ones, doomed to pass their Christmas on sick beds, were enlivened by the appearance of the Post Toy Fund toys, particularly several large toys and dolls.

The children at the hospital are never so ill that they fail to keep close watch for Santa Claus as Christmas Eve ushers in the day-of-days for children. Their parents and friends, of course, do their utmost to provide some kind of individual cheer for the children, but the thing that brings the real Christmas spirit into the institution is that consignment of toys from The Post Toy Fund.

Outside Aid Needed.

All social welfare agencies and institutions this year are hard put to it to provide relief, food, clothing and rent for their charges. Nothing can be deducted from their funds for toys. Therefore such outside movements as The Post Toy Fund must step in and aid Santa Claus.

The Post Toy Fund, which has established headquarters at 1418 H street northwest, also heeds appeals of patriotic societies and other morale-building groups here for the children within the reach of their ministrations. Individual appeals for toys, when the need is borne out by careful investigation, also are answered and no mother or father who reads about The Post Toy Fund need hesitate to ask for a share of these toys for their children. That is, if the parents have no other way of obtaining them, and have not appealed to other groups for toys. The effort is made not to duplicate toys, but The Post Toy Fund represents the warm-hearted wish of hundreds of Washingtonians to provide toys for children who might otherwise be without them on Christmas Day and its work is done without any more red tape than is absolutely necessary.

Persons having a number of toys they wish to donate to The Post Toy Fund may have them transported without charge to the fund headquarters by calling either Terminal Taxicab or the fund headquarters, telephone Sterling 4746. Through the cooperation of the Terminal Taxicab Association each of its drivers is a Santa Claus aid for the fund.

Interest in Bugling Contest.

Predictions are being made that more scouts will enter the contest this year than ever before. The high scorer will be made the council bugler for 1935, and the second highest will be ranked assistant council bugler.

Eight out of the following 15 calls will be used: First call, Scout call, reveille, mess, swimming, to the colors, officers' call, drill, assembly, retreat, recall, taps, church, fire, call to quarters.

Campfire Party to Be Held By Wanderbirds on Sunday

Hikers Plan Trip Through Hills About Great Falls, Virginia.

By Robert Shosteck.

Anticipating fair weather Sunday, the Wanderbirds Hiking Club plans a trip through the hills about Great Falls, Va., the hike ending in a campfire party at the falls. Mr. Vega, who is leading this trip, has invited a veteran native of these hills to tell some of the interesting ancedotes and history relating to this region. Many interesting yet little-known facts will be learned about the old jail built near the falls in the 1700's, the old Cumberland Canal, and the various colonial homes to be seen in the vicinity.

The club invites readers of The Washington Post to join them on this 8-mile trip. Buses will leave The Post Building at 10 a. m. for the trip to the falls, near which the hike begins. The fare will be 50 cents and reservations must be made in advance at National 4200. The buses will return to Washington by 8 p. m.

Leaving the buses at the junction of the Leesburg pike and the gravel road to the falls, the hikers will proceed about one-half mile toward the river, turning off to the left on a dirt road. This road winds through a hilly region timbered, for the greater part, with a great variety of hardwoods, occasional patches of pine woods or small areas of cultivated land diversifying the scenery.

About 3 miles from the falls road the hikers reach a crossroad at an elevation of over 400 feet. From this point the nearby Appalachian ranges are visible on a clear day, particularly Sugar Loaf Mountain. In a nearby wood the Wanderbirds will stop for lunch.

Turning right into the wood, the hikers will follow a woodland trail to the River Bend road, a dirt road leading to an old resort on the Potomac. Several old houses, dating back to colonial days, may be seen along this road. From River Bend the hikers will follow the Potomac-side trail to Great Falls, stopping for water at a fine spring a short distance below the bend.

A campfire party near the falls, with the usual coffee, hot dogs and songs, will mark the end of another perfect day. The venerable historian will be with us to tell about the fascinating tradition of the falls country. Newcomers are once more advised that durable hiking clothes, a drinking cup and plenty of eats make the trip more interesting.

Starlings' Visit Stops Town Clock; Hagerstown Frets

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.). A flock of starlings, estimated at 5,000 in number, which suddenly descended upon the high tower over the City Hall last night, stopped the ancient "town clock."

The birds, roosting upon the hands of the clock and also inside upon the works, caused the clock to stop, and their chattering was so loud that guests in a hotel adjacent were kept awake most of the night. The birds were finally routed early today by the backfiring of an automobile.

Debutantes Presented At Brilliant Social Events

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The debutantes held sway in Capital society yesterday. Two outstanding debutantes were presented. Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton introduced her daughter, Miss Stellita Stapleton, to society at a large reception in her home on Massachusetts avenue. The handsome residence made a charming setting for the debutante, a brunette with an enthusiasm for things which many of the younger generation seems to lack. She wore a Peggy Hoyt frock of blush lace and chiffon fashioned with a flowing skirt and trimmed with ermine tails caught in the folds of the frock with tiny gardenias.

Mrs. Stapleton wore a gown of handsome black lace, and she and her daughter received in the large drawing room. In the dining room, where many of the guests gathered, was the tea table, at which a number of ladies took turns at pouring. These were Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Panama; Mrs. Pierce Butler, wife of Associate Justice Butler; Mrs. John W. Davidge, Mrs. Kenna Elkins, Mrs. Randall Hagner, Mrs. John Hamilton, Mrs. George E. Hamilton, Mrs. Russell Harrison, Mrs. John Phillip Hill, Mrs. Paul E. Johnson, Mrs. Breckinridge Long, wife of the United States Ambassador to Rome; Mrs. Dudley Morgan, Mrs. Arthur O'Brien, Mrs. George N. Peek, Mrs. Walter Tuckerman and Mrs. Perry Heath.

Tompkins, Col. and Mrs. Edwin Watson, Col. and Mrs. Charles Allen, Mrs. Theodore P. Noyes, Miss Mary Louise Johnson, Miss Exilona Hamilton, Capt. William C. DeWare and Lieut. Fletcher Cole.

Assisting the debutante were Miss Valerie Prochnik, Miss Christine Long, Miss Louise Chase Lyers, Miss Dorothy Marlatt, Miss Bamble McKenna, Miss Estherbelle McHarg, Miss Marianna Dunn, Miss Suzanne Hill, Miss Ruth Sowers, Miss Dorothea Sowers, Miss Christine Ekengren, Miss Gertrude Faust, Miss Martha Davidge, Miss Ruth Patton, Miss Emlen Knight Davies, Miss Louise Alexander, Miss Ruth Tuckerman and Miss Marie Butler of Baltimore.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry K. McHarg, jr., entertained last night at a brilliant ball at the Mayflower when they presented their daughter, Miss Estherbelle McHarg, to society. The ballroom was charmingly decorated with palms and greens, and the flowers which had been sent to the debutante were heaped in colorful masses in two of the boxes, much as the flowers are placed at the bachelors' cotillion in Baltimore.

Large Dinner at Mayflower.

Mr. and Mrs. George Amory Maddox entertained at a large dinner preceding the dance at the Mayflower for their debutante daughter, Miss Emily Stuart Maddox. Miss Maddox wore a gown of gold lame embroidered on white crepe and fashioned with a dropped shoulder line.

In a group of last season's debutantes were Miss Mary McDowell, Miss Ruth Tuckerman, Miss Marguerite Lee, Miss Alice V. Fleming, Miss Mary Louise Marsh, Miss Hope Jackson, Miss Elizabeth Walker, Miss Elizabeth Gill, Miss Caroline Johnson and Miss Mary Dwight.

Out-of-town guests included Miss Virginia Ward, of Philadelphia; Miss Alice Dunning and Miss Beatrice Elphinstone, of New York; Miss Frances Lee Weeks, of Newton, Mass., house guest of her cousin, Miss Martha Davidge, and Miss Margaret Luedke, of Wisconsin, guest of Miss Emelen Davies.

50 Brave Rain To Pursue Fox In Warrenton

Mlle. Lea Bouligny Is Hostess at Breakfast After Hunt.

In spite of the inclement weather, a field of 50 gathered at the meet of the Warrenton Hunt yesterday. An enthusiastic group of horsemen started at 10 o'clock from Neptune Lodge, the home of the Sawyers, a goodly number of pink coats striking a note of cheer. Although it was somewhat heavy underfoot, they had a good run and were gratified in starting a fox promptly.

After three hours of riding in the rain, the hardy souls arrived at the Warrenton Country School where Mlle. Lea Bouligny, the principal, had invited the field for Thanksgiving breakfast. It was a pretty sight, the gaily garbed crowd foregathering among the rambling cream-colored buildings. The first objective was the punch bowl in the living room, whence they descended to the dining room where a hearty repast awaited them.

Mr. Amory Carhart, the M. F. H., was expressing the gratification of the sporting spirit of the members of the hunt as evidenced by the large number who turned out. Mrs. Carhart was chic in a gray and brown plaid skirt with a coat and hat of wine velvet.

The refectory tables had great bowls of fruit, while the rest of the room was decorated with autumn leaves and chrysanthemums. Mlle. Bouligny, attired in black crepe, with touches of turquoise, greeted the guests, some of which were the parents of the girls, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Steven Whitney, of Morristown, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Bates Compton, of New York City, and Mr. and Mrs. C. W. H. Dunbar, of New York.

Among the out-of-town sportsmen were Mr. Scott Truesdale, of Westbury; Mr. Simonds Duryea, of Long Island, and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Sloane Colt, of Tuxedo. Mrs. Colt wore a gray sport outfit with brown accessories. Miss Viola Winmill and her brother, Mr. Townsend Winmill, were seen chatting with Mr. North Fletcher, all of the local hunt. The Alec Hagners were also seen, Mrs. Hagner looking attractive in a two-piece brown wool check skirt with brown jersey jumper and scarf matching the skirt. The George Cuttings were accompanied by Mrs. Cutting's mother, Mrs. Converse, of Boston. Helping to welcome the guests was Mrs. Lindsay Fitch, the assistant principal, who was in a gold and brown tweed costume. Her guest, Miss Louise Koppel, of New Orleans and New York, was dressed in a dark green knitted suit with a yellow scarf.

Dressy Gloves Prevent Hands From Chapping

Local Store Featuring Kind That Keeps Skin Soft and White.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HITHERTO the fashionable woman was content with her gloves if they fit well, wore long, and suited her costume. "What more," she queried, "could anyone ask of gloves?" The answer comes with certain pairs featured in local stores.

These new and practical gloves are made from a fine quality of capeskin which has been treated with a hand cream. The almonizing process, as it's called, makes the leather mellow soft — delicately fragrant — and perspiration proof.

The grandest part of all, of course, is the beautifying property of the gloves themselves. They keep the hands soft, smooth and white, and—hurrah for this—they prevent chapping. For years there have been the homely scarecrow rubber gloves one wore to bed each night, or flapped around in during the day, but for the first time there are actually dress gloves which help you to lovely hands.

They come in two colors, black and brown, and in several novel styles. Some have the fancy flaring stitched cuffs, others are more tailored with small cuff bindings of leather rolls.

Prolonging Life of Hats.

A hat can stand a lot of wear and tear if it's given the proper care at home. The best way to keep it young looking, to ward off smudges and wrinkles is to place it on a hat stand every night. Clever little stands that clamp onto the closet shelf sell for 10 cents in a local store.

Don't fail to brush your hat several times a week.

Don't throw your hat on a chair or bed and leave it to collect dust and lose its shape.

If you must change the shape of your hat, don't pin it this way and that. Baste it instead. The metal is liable to leave stains, and is likely to result in torn places.

Bedroom Slippers.

"Ho-hum, it's a lazy life!" If bedroom slippers could speak what a chorus we'd hear. Their very appearance, however, is eloquent on leisure and comfort. Outside they are bright hued, fine ribbed corduroys, red, blue, green and black with a warm looking binding of white bunny fur. Inside there's a soft rayon lining concealing a soft padded sole. Slight heels provide just enough "lift" to satisfy the contrary arch.

Perfume Pins on Display.

It's the little things that matter—little things like the perfume pins on display in a local shop. Some of them are shaped like dapper little men, others like funny little women. Inside they're stuffed with cotton, well concealed beneath their metal clothes. You put just a drop of perfume on this and wear the pin on your frock.

Gold and Silver Lace Collars.

Good Queen Bess liked nothing better than flattering furbelows around her neck. She sponsored a style trend when she adapted the high, stiff ruffs and made them an inevitable part of her costume. If she could shop in a local store today, it's easy to imagine her going into ecstacies over some gold and silver lace collars. These are gathered into full and flattering ruffles which fit around the neck of a new dress to add a million-dollar touch, or else they're used to give an old dress a new dash and verve.

They're fine for another purpose, too. Maybe you have a plain street frock that isn't quite dressy enough for a certain occasion. You should worry if you have a gold or silver lace collar. Add this, and you're ready to go!

Pick-Me-Up Kits.

A pick-me-up kit is all its name implies. When you come home late in the afternoon, weary, worn and depressed, you open your kit and give your face a lift. An attractive red and black alligator exterior conceals a gay plaid lining. There's a small jar of beauty grains for a thorough face-washing, a tissue cream, hand lotion, skin toning lotion, cleasing cream, eyelash grower, cream rouge, lipstick and powder.

Maybe you don't know what to give a certain somebody for Christmas. Here's the answer in a red or black alligator skin pick-me-up kit!

Solidified Eau de Cologne.

A spicy, refreshing eau de cologne became so popular with shoppers who wanted something of this sort for driving away headaches that the manufacturers decided to put it out in solidified form. Now it's available in this convenient fashion inclosed in a metal tube. It costs little, is a fine revivifier, and lasts for a long, long time.

"Tall Drink" Glasses.

"Tall drink" glasses are almost twice as high as the average beverage glass, and certainly a dozen times as brilliantly tinted in a wide assortment of colors. These attractive novelties are available in a Connecticut avenue shop.

Flattened Purse Calls for Care In Post-Thanksgiving Repasts

Housewife Will Have to Use Her Ingenuity to Sate Appetites.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THIS WEEK-END is the time the housewife will have to use her ingenuity. The family pocketbook will be decreased to a flattened state after the splendid Thanksgiving repast, and the family's appetite must be tempted again by the usual, rather than the unusual menus enjoyed in the past few days.

Give a little extra time and thought to this week-end's menus then, and both the family budgeter and the other members of the family will be satisfied.

If you must economize, start with the meat, for this is usually the most costly item on the Sunday dinner. Instead of buying one of the choicest cuts for roast (leg of lamb, prime rib roast of beef, sirloin roast) consider the pot roast, either top round or chuck; the shoulder of iamb, boned and rolled; veal shoulder made with a pocket for dressing; or flank steak that needs only careful cooking to make it a delicious piece of meat.

Many of these lesser cuts of meat have a flavor as fine and sometimes finer than the most expensive cuts of meat. However, the less choice cuts are tougher and need careful or special preparation.

Saturday Dinner Menu.

Sauerkraut juice
Baked round steak in shells
Delmonico potatoes Turnip greens
Carrot, nut and apple salad
Bread and butter
Baked custard
Coffee Milk for children

Sunday Breakfast Menu.

Stewed dried apricots
Jelly omelet
Crisp bacon
Biscuits Hot cocoa

Sunday Dinner Menu.

Minted orange cup
Roast stuffed shoulder of lamb
Chinese cabbage Buttered peas
Romaine with French dressing
Coffee jelly with whipped cream
Tea Milk (for children.)

Sunday Supper Menu.

Cream of tomato soup
Crowned pear salad
Doughnuts Mulled cider
Milk (for children)

The shells mentioned for the round steak in Saturday's dinner menu may be purchased especially for this purpose or they may be ordinary clam shells which have been picked up on the seashore.

Grind the round steak, season with salt, pepper, chopped onion and green pepper, and place a mound of the mixture in each shell. Place a small piece of butter on top of each mound and bake in a hot oven for a few minutes and then reduce the heat to moderate until the meat is cooked.

Minted Orange Cup.

6 small, rather sour oranges
Powdered sugar
Fresh mint
3 tablespoons lemon juice or
3 tablespoons pineapple juice
2 tablespoons sugar

Separate the orange into sections and remove the thin skin with a pair of scissors. Chill thoroughly, place in glasses, sprinkle with powdered sugar and add the lemon juice mixed with pineapple juice or sugar. Sprinkle with chopped mint and garnish with an upright sprig of mint in the center of the glass.

Crowned Pear Salad.

Mulled Cider.

4 cups sweet cider
8 whole cloves
1 teaspoon whole allspice
1 tablespoon stick cinnamon, broken.

Place ingredients in sauce pan and heat slowly to boiling. Strain and serve hot. This amount serves six.

Economizing on Meat Will Help Reduce Costs Meals' Costs.

Bias-Cut, Low V-Back Slip for Evening Gown

Pattern No. 604.

WITH A CHARMING frock and smart accessories a woman often thinks she is perfectly turned out. If only she would look in the mirror and see how a poorly fitting, bunchy slip can spoil the entire ensemble. With the holiday season almost here, lingerie becomes as important as new party gowns. Today's design, a bias-cut slip with a low V-back and a dart-fitted brassiere top, is grand under an evening dress. Incidentally it makes a Christmas gift which would delight any woman.

The pattern is cut in sizes 32 to 42. Size 36 requires 2⅜ yards of 39-inch material for the slip; ⅞ yard of 39-inch material for the brassiere top.

How to Keep Well

Sties.

A STY or hordeolum is an infection of one of the small glands on the borders of the eyelids with a common pus producing organism, the staphylococcus. A single sty never produces serious results, but may be exceedingly painful and annoying. Many persons have sties recurring over long periods of time, and in such cases the disability and loss of time may be serious.

The cause of sties is an accumulation of material obstructing the drainage of these small glands, allowing bacteria to grow within them. In persons with eye strain due to refractive errors there is more likely to be a periodic appearance of this condition, and those whose resistance to infection is lowered by any chronic disease or by malnutrition are frequent victims.

The treatment of an individual sty consists in applying hot and moist applications until the small abscess has developed or come to a head, when a small yellow point can be seen. At this time the sty should be opened under careful sterile precautions by a physician, and drainage assisted by further application of hot wet packs. The abscessed area must not be squeezed.

The development of other sties may often be prevented by the use of antiseptic ointments, such as yellow oxide of mercury on the lid border. Cases in which the sties recur in spite of such treatment should be carefully examined for refractive errors in order to remove the cause of eye strain.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

Although they love each other intensely, Jocelyn and Dick Crane are on the verge of separation through a series of misunderstandings. In Paris together, Dick gives her until the boat train leaves to decide whether she will give back money Ogden Temple, wealthy sculptor, has paid her for posing for him. She goes to his chateau to return the money and he imprisons her because he loves her and believes that her greatest happiness lies in leaving her husband. Meanwhile, the boat train leaves, with Dick sailing for home alone. On her return to the hotel Jocelyn receives a frantic telephone call from her host, Ollie Keene, summoning her to a friend's apartment.

WHEN she had closed the door after her, Jocelyn drifted restlessly to the desk where, through the long French window, she could stare out over Paris, robed in sultry mauves this late June twilight.

"I can't bear it!" she cried aloud. Love ran through her veins, clutched at her heart like fingers wringing the blood from it.

She tried to write. "Dick, beloved—There was a horrible mistake, I meant to come to you. But first I had to give the money back to Temple, and I went——"

No, that wouldn't do. Tear it up. Begin again.

A Call From Ollie.

"I will never let you go now," he had said. "Wherever you are in the world I will find you. For I have never before asked a woman to marry me, and there is only one answer."

Someone knocked. Jocelyn turned, her hand to her heart. It was only Marie, but something in the maid's manner steadied her.

"Monsieur is at the telephone," Marie said, peering into the room with her bright French eyes. "He insists he must speak with Madame."

What could Ollie want at this hour? Eleven by the clock on the dressing-table. Slowly Jocelyn went to the telephone by her bed. She was staying on with the Keenes. That meant not shirking.

Ollie's thickened voice struggled to hurdle the obstacle of words. There was a terrible urgency to it, as if the last spark of his mind were signaling in a fog.

"Inna jam, Lyon. Come quickly. Carrie's place—two hundre'n fourtwo Boul'vard Mont—" The voice blundered off with the whimper of a frightened child, as if someone were pulling him away from the telephone.

Something was very wrong with Ollie, and Carrie Franks was at the bottom of it. Jocelyn never doubted that as she turned from the telephone.

The taxi she summoned stopped on the Boulevard Montparnasse, 242. As she reached the third floor landing the door flew open and a lanky youth in top hat and dress clothes swaggered out, two ladies on his arms. The smaller of the two women stopped in front of Jocelyn, slanting against the arm that held her up.

She waited until they had disappeared. Her heart felt faint with disgust. But Ollie was in there alone with Carrie. And—he had called her. Noiselessly she pushed the door farther open and walked into a large disordered sitting room. No one there.

Carrie Was Beautiful.

Suddenly from a room beyond came a sound that stiffened Jocelyn. The crash of someone falling. Then silence again. With no further hesitation she moved across the green rug and opened the first door she came to.

It was a small, back bedroom. Ollie lay on the floor, Carrie kneeling beside him, going through his pockets.

"What the devil are you doing here?" she demanded. The play-Carrie was gone. Her eyes, green and wary as an alley cat's, shone on an enemy.

Jocelyn pointed down at Ollie, whose heavy breathing rather horribly moved his stiff white shirt front. The thready veins seemed merged in purple that dangerously spread to his forehead, tingeing his bald spot. "What is Mr. Keene doing there?" she inquired with an authority that Carrie instantly resented.

Under the rouge on her cheeks, color spread. "He's passed out, the idiot," she snapped. "He's had almost a quart of cognac since dinner."

Jocelyn walked deliberately over to the writing table. Blank checks with blots of ink and crazy pen strokes. "He couldn't even sign his name, could he?" Her voice was quiet in contempt. "I hope you found his pockets more profitable."

Tirade Continued.

Carrie Franks advanced a step in the small room, blocked in one corner by a lace-covered couch-bed, lace cushions tricked out with blue ribbon bows. "What business is it of yours, I'd like to know? You meddled once before," she said shrilly. "I owe you one for that. This time, keep out—and get out——"

"You're being very stupid." Jocelyn faced her coldly. "You can't get away with this sort of thing. You've been trying to make Mr. Keene sign checks when he wasn't himself. They have an ugly name for that in the courts."

"He's not going to any courts." But fear leaped to Carrie's eyes. Glazed in her pink and gold, she stood up to Jocelyn's slim, scornful height. "He wanted to break with me tonight," she burst out. "I've stuck to Ollie. I've been a damn good pal of his, and I never took a sou before that I didn't earn running around this town at all hours with him, listening to all he had to say about that wife of his and her Russian prince. I'll say I've earned something."

Help Refused.

Ollie, on the floor, grunted, moaned between swollen lips. Jocelyn went to bend over him. "We must do something at once," she said quickly. "Have you any smelling salts or spirits of ammonia? Help me lift him onto the bed."

"Help—nothing! And don't think you're getting away with this, either," she said fiercely. "I hear a few things in Paris, myself. You may think Rita Keene's your friend, but she's not——"

Before Jocelyn could move or answer, Carrie had rushed out of the room. The front door slammed.

Meanwhile, Carrie Franks, on the boulevard, tapped along on her high heels, her red lips sullen. She would never get Ollie back now—not after tonight.

She stepped into a restaurant and ragingly called up the Hotel Georges V. Yes, Mme. Keene had just come in.

Carrie made her voice polite, lady-like. "Mrs. Keene? You don't know me, but I thought it might interest you— You'll find your husband—I'm afraid quite drunk—at 242 Boulevard Montparnasse with a friend of yours." And she rang off.

Willie, the Office Boy, has often asked us, "Why is a book critic?" We know the answer: a book critic is a person who, practically, is chained to a typewriter and who reads all the new books in order to save others time, expense and worry in choosing good, interesting books to buy, borrow, or send as a Christmas present to Aunt Minnie who lives in Peoria . . . but who, also, must write so interestingly that his column is excellent daily reading in itself.

Our Ted is something of an enigma among book critics. Long ago, he was forced to turn in his card to the Amalgamated Book Reviewers of America because he violated union rules by actually praising a new novel. You see, his column, "No End of Books," found each day in The Washington Post on the Page Opposite Editorials, really helps you in your literary wanderings, and is not used as a private sounding board for Theodore Hall. Then, too, he can't pick bones with every new book. He can never tell when some struggling author whom he has panned mercilessly will prove a second Cabell or Sinclair Lewis . . . or dope an EPIC program and run for Governor!

But his reports are accurate, clear, concise and complete. He knows his trade and his authors (the author of "Dodsworth" is just plain "Red" Lewis to him). His pronouncements are serious and studied, like those of the Delphian oracle, but they're far from Deadly Dull. You'll find him discussing with equal zest the latest economic scheme for dragging Prosperity from behind that corner, or the poems of Edna St. Vincent Millay, or P. G. Wodehouse's new "Jeeves" story. He writes well: not many persons know that he helped "ghost-write" a famous, best-selling American history.

"No End of Books," a friend once told us, must be written by a chap with no end of spare time for reading all those books. Well, Ted Hall's that sort of chap. Not long ago, after he had been unlocked from his typewriter and allowed an afternoon off, we discovered him browsing around in Brentano's basement.

He recognized us and blushed guiltily. "Oh," he admitted, "I just thought I'd like a good book to read tonight."

Women Have Many Rights in Norway

Girls Accorded Extensive Social Freedom.

Oslo, Norway (AP).—In customs and laws of Norway there are many evidences of the feminine touch. But as actual participants in politics women have been a negligible factor.

In two decades the condition of Norwegian women has been elevated greatly. They have been voting since 1913. But at no time have there been more than three women in Parliament at the same time, and none has advanced to the position of cabinet member. Women are still barred from the diplomatic service, and they may not serve in the position of priests or in hight state offices.

While not active politically, women make themselves felt in other fields. Norway has eminent women scientists, authors, painters, judges, physicians and journalists.

The Double Value of Preemptive Bids.

Psychic bids were originally discovered and used as a means of inhibiting the side with most of the high cards from reaching its proper game or Slam contract. As I have mentioned in the past, psychic bids are no longer successful against good opposition, for players have found that in spite of psychics they can reach the proper final contract by the simple process of believing partner's rather than the opponents' bids.

There is no 100 per cent sure defense, however, against preemptive bids. When the opponent on your right fires an opening three or four spade bid at you—even though you may know that this player has nothing but a long string of spades, and even though you may see a great many high cards in your own hand—there is no way that you can surely convey the proper amount of information to your partner, and in turn get information from him, as three or four valuable rounds of bidding have been taken away from you.

Because the preemptive bid deprives the opponents of these valuable rounds of bidding, it may accomplish one of two very satisfactory results. If the opposing strength is divided, a preemptive bid may keep the opponents from entering the bidding at all; or, if they do enter the bidding, from reaching the high contract which their cards justify; or, if they get high enough, from playing the hand in their best suit. If, instead of being divided, the opposing strength is concentrated in one hand, the strong opponent is likely to contract for a Slam, gambling that one or more key cards are in his partner's hand. Of course, if his partner does not have these cards, a penalty will be incurred.

This is exactly what occurred on the hand below. South opened the bidding with a very round preemptive bid, and the opponents reached a Slam contract in diamonds, lacking the Ace and King of trumps.

North, Dealer.

	♠ 8 6 2 ♡ 10 9 4 2 ◇ 7 ♣ J 10 7 6 2
♠ A ♡ A K Q J ◇ Q J 10 9 6 ♣ A K Q	N W E S	♠ K 7 ♡ 8 6 5 ◇ 8 5 4 3 2 ♣ 8 5 3
	♠ Q J 10 9 5 4 3 ♡ 7 3 ◇ A K ♣ 9 4

The bidding: (Figures after bid refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	4♠(1)	4NT(2)
Pass	5◇(3)	Pass	6◇(4)
Pass	Pass	Dbl.(5)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—A very sound non-vulnerable shut-out bid. South has five sure winners in spades and two in diamonds, which assure that the worst possible set, even with a Yarborough in dummy, is 450 points. South, with no defense in hearts or in clubs, naturally fears an opposing game.

2—The conventional and soundest line of defense against an opposing preemptive bid when one holds a rock-crusher. West's four-notrump bid is absolutely forcing, commanding a takeout in his partner's best suit.

3—A forced response.

4—I do not see how West can be severely criticized for this bid. He feels that South's four-spade bid, which was made in an attempt to "fix" him, will almost surely do so unless he himself takes the bull by the horns and bids six. West is gambling only on finding the diamond King in his partner's hand. He realizes that his partner's five-diamond bid was forced, but he also realizes that even if East held four or five diamonds to the King and nothing else, the latter could not have bid six diamonds over four notrump. In addition, South's four-spade bid does not suggest that South holds outside strength and accordingly it seems to West far better than even money that East holds one of the missing diamond honors.

5—South, wanting to make his victory complete, doubles, perhaps a little bit unwisely. It is barely possible from the bidding, even though most unlikely, that the opponents may be able to run to six hearts or six notrump and make this contract unless they get a diamond opening. Of course, East and West had to stay in their six-diamond contract and it was automatically defeated one trick. East did have a King, but it was the wrong King.

Another victory was thus chalked up for the preemptive bid. It is possible that even without the four-spade bid West, with his gigantic hand, might have carried the bidding to six, but at least there would have been a better chance of his staying out of the contract if he had had more rounds of bidding in which to exchange information.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF NOVEMBER 30 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 5:45 to 7:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m.

On this November 30 you should avoid taking any undue risks in business, as it is likely to be unfavorable for trades formulated on purely a speculative hope. It is advisable to be conservative in figuring overhead operating costs, or estimating prospective profits. The housewife will display good judgment if she indulges in window shopping on this date, as it might enable her to save money. In making social contacts be careful not to mix the fastidiously inclined with those of careless habits. Errors in changing money are liable to occur, so exercise caution. Erratic friends are apt to take offense on the slightest pretext; to avoid arousing their ire it might pay to be very diplomatic. Married and engaged couples, as well as those seeking to gain the good grace of one he or she greatly admires, should guard against doing anything that might create a feeling of disappointment.

If a woman and November 30 is your birthday, be prepared to receive callers, as visitors may help brighten your day. You have probably a nature that craves the peaceful solitude to be found in suburban life. Some horticultural pursuit might be congenial to you, as well as profitable. Your courageous outlook on existence will be reflected in your work and may be the means of your gaining the end for which you strive. Writing, demonstrating, painting or teaching should offer work for which you might be best fitted. A mothering and domestic disposition should assure unqualified success as a wife.

The child born on November 30, when it attains its majority, should be well equipped both mentally, as well as physically, to energetically take up the work for which it is best qualified. A pleasant personality may prove a great asset.

If a man and November 30 is your natal day, the spirit of Nimrod possibly dominates your being, so that anything pertaining to hunting or fishing finds you responsive. You very likely have an uncanny ability to find your way out of tight places, finding yourself eventually on the right track, regardless of whether it is the forest or commercial life tangles that beset you. The Army or Navy, as well as the stage, political platform, pulpit, or literary field offer excellent opportunities.

Successful people born on November 30:

Charlotte Fiske (Bates) Roge, author.
Henry P. Wright, educator.

MORNING COSTUME.

EVENING GOWN.

THE DASHING beauty of the Duchess of Kent lends itself particularly well to evening apparel. As befits a duchess, many regal gowns are included in her trousseau. In the one shown above, she will appear at many of the formal and ceremonious court functions. The grown, which is made on stately lines, is a trained model of bois de rose and gold lace, a combination well fitted to the dark beauty of the duchess. The gown is finished with a long trailed sash of brown tulle which adds a softening note. In keeping with the present tendencies in evening apparel, the front decollete is a deep U, the back a low V. The design is by Molyneux.

DAYTIME ENSEMBLE.

THE PEASANT trend in apparel, which is apparent in fashionable circles everywhere, manifests itself in the trousseau of the Duchess of Kent. A peasant model morning ensemble is sketched above. The ensemble is of black wool with shirred neckline and big sleeves reminiscent of a peasant's smock. The flowing graceful lines of the outfit make it particularly becoming. The three-quarter length coat is lined with black velvet and the belt is made of the same material. The peasant motif is carried out in the coat, which is shirred quite simply at the neckline and finished without a collar. Design by Molyneux.

SPORTS COSTUME.

SPORTS COSTUMES are by now the most important feature of any bride's trousseau and the new Duchess of Kent is no exception to this rule. A large part of the trousseau is devoted to sports apparel and the models she has adopted are expected to influence widely women's sports styles. The suit sketched above, which may be worn for almost any kind of a morning event is of beige, red and green tweed cut on classic tailored lines, which give it the swagger style so beloved of the British. It is worn with a beige crinkled crepe blouse.
The design is by Molyneux.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Woman of 38, Married Four Years to Man 10 Years Her Junior, Whom She Has Supported, Now Must Risk Losing Him or Giving Up Her Job.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a woman of 38. Four years ago, I eloped with and married a man 10 years younger than myself. He was not my social or educational equal, and I know it sounds like a foolish and reckless thing to have done. But I did it for companionship and to escape a feeling of loneliness and futility.

* * * *

I made a disastrous first marriage when I was 24, which lasted only a few months. There is no need to go into the details of that, but the break-up left me in a bitter state of mind against men. For years I despised and avoided them. Then I met this boy, or so I regarded him.

* * * *

He, too, had had an unhappy love affair, and I think it was a kinship built on mutual sympathy that first drew us together. He hated women almost as much as I disliked men. I had a nice little apartment, a car, and a good job. Gradually we were spending more and more time together. One night he suggested we get married and we did so on the spur of the moment, without saying anything of our plans to my family, who live nearby in Virginia.

* * * *

When I introduced him to them, they told me I had made a great mistake. That he was only marrying me for support. At that time, he had been out of work for several months, but he was confident he could find another job. He said I had restored his belief in himself, and that he believed we could make up to each other what life had heretofore denied us.

* * * *

During the four years of our marriage, I have grown terribly dependent upon his companionship, but in all that time I have had to support him. I have had several salary cuts. He has held an occasional job, sometimes for as long as three months, others for only a week or two. I have tried to keep up my faith in his good intentions, but the constant nagging of my family about his being a parasite on my earnings, as well as my anxiety over our financial situation, is driving me to a desperate state of nerves. I have used up all my surplus bank account, mostly on him. He has extravagant tastes in clothes, in entertainment, and in living.

* * * *

During the past year and a half we have had one desperate quarrel after another. Twice he has left me, vowing he could no longer endure my scolding and advice and saying he was doing it for the good of both of us, and both times he returned like a repenant small boy, begging my forgiveness and asking me to take him back, which of course I did.

* * * *

Two weeks ago we had another quarrel over money matters and his extravagant tendencies, as usual. He left, saying I would never hear from him again, unless he made good, and that if he did he would send for me, and I could live on his earnings for a change. Last week I had a wire from him from a Southern city, followed by several letters and telephone calls, saying he had found a job and was settling there for good. He said he would not return, but that I can join him there if I like; that he will no longer live at my expense, and that if I want to be his wife, I must take my chances with him.

* * * *

My friends and my family say it would be the height of folly for me to put my dependence in him. I am a little inclined to think so myself. But I have grown so accustomed to looking after him, caring for him, that I feel life would be unbearable if I had to give him up now.

What do you advise me to do?
HILDA K.

Be Slow to Decide.

DEAR HILDA K.: I would apply the test of time to this situation. I would make no hasty decision and be very slow to burn the bridge of economic security behind me. Since your husband inclines toward rash, high-flown challenging gestures to fate, all the more reason for you to supply a steadying balance of deliberate common sense.

* * * *

If he is sincere in his intention to make good, financially, in his craft or profession, and in his desire to prove his right to be called a man by supporting his wife, your wholly justifiable hesitancy toward accepting the word for the deed will not alter these facts. If there is sufficient stability in his character to warrant your trust, he will realize, however reluctantly, the necessity of proving his merit.

* * * *

On the other hand, there is the possibility he may be hurling the alternative at you in the hope you won't accept, and thereby free him of further obligation in your regard. If such should be the case, it becomes doubly important that you maintain your present financial security. You stand to gain little, and to lose much, in recklessly trading the bird in hand for the hypothetical two in the bush in this instance.

* * * *

As a matter of fact, I suspect if your marriage does weather this and similar storms, it is because it has been built on something of a mother-and-son emotional relationship; and that your husband will always depend more on you, than you may on him, for moral and financial support. I believe your best chance of holding him is to maintain a consistently independent attitude.

'Pub' Denied Late Closing For Wedding Celebration

A request from a small "pub" in England for a permit to remain open after 10 o'clock tomorrow night so the populace could celebrate the wedding of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina has been refused.

Authorities, in refusing the request, said that since the wedding was not being solemnized at the "pub" there was no reason why the closing time should be extended.

Harris & Ewing.

Thomas Mullikan, tuba player with the National Symphony Orchestra, which will be heard in four children's concerts sponsored by The Post, beginning next Monday.

This is the twelfth in a series on instruments of the orchestra, presented as a preliminary to the children's concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Hans Kindler conducting, which The Post will sponsor next week.

THE modern tuba exists in many sizes. There are six of these—soprano, alto, tenor, barytone, bass and contrabass. The smaller members of this family are not found in the orchestra, but take part in military bands, especially in France, under the name of saxhorns.

The bass tuba, or bombardon, is employed in the symphony orchestra. It consists of a rather wide tapering brass tube, curved in a fairly short and rounded oblong and provided with a deep-cupped mouthpiece. It has the usual pistons, or valves, but is provided with an extra one that lowers the pitch. The four pistons thus enable the player to produce a scale of an octave below any given open tone on the instrument.

The bass tuba can give the lowest E flat on the piano. Its deeper tones are full, and somewhat forcible, almost brutal, in quality. Its compass extends upward about 2½ octaves. Wagner gave an impetus to the use of tubas, calling for five in his "Nibelung Ring."

The tuba has not the smooth quality of the trombone, but its gruff harshness can be made very effective.

Tomorrow—The Tympani.

Adults Urged To Qualify As Playmates

CHILDREN are running on the hobby platform. In the Parents' Magazine for December, Ernest Elmo Calkins urges grown-ups to pledge their support to a recreational program in which very young persons are the major interest, because, as he puts it:

"The biggest benefit new leisure can confer on you is the opportunity to become acquainted with your children—or if you have none—with any children."

In the opinion of Mr. Calkins, who has had 67 years in which to garner knowledge, adults who ignore the chance or fail to qualify as playmates for the children miss more than they can know by not learning how a child's mind unfolds, how it adjusts itself to a new world, full of surprises, a world that the child frequently re-creates in his own image.

"We grown-ups have our motor cars, our radio sets, our bridge cards and backgammon boards to amuse us; the children have their toys," he added. "Play, however, is something wholly apart from playthings. It is a spirit, a state of mind, an attitude toward the surrounding world. It does not exist in tangible things but in the imagination.

"Learning to be interesting to your child requires a great deal more than the ability to appraise a rare postage stamp or a piece of glass."

Florida Woman, A Judge at 32, Credits Luck

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 29 (AP).—Politics, at 32, has brought an individual "New Deal" to Sarah Bryan, one of Florida's few women judges.

"I was lucky. It just happened," is the way the tall, comely, soft-spoken woman describes her success.

She calls it luck that she won the office of justice of the peace over six men candidates.

Gov. Dave Sholtz appointed her to the Eleventh District post in Duval County (Jacksonville) after the electorate had given her a huge majority in the spring primary.

Receives "Biggest Thrill."

Soon after the appointment, Miss Bryan received her "biggest thrill." She sat on the bench as municipal judge in a Jacksonville court.

Miss Bryan says she was forced into politics. For 11 years she was assistant to the late Justice B. M. Craig and today she occupies the desk of her "boss" in the little district office. During those years, she said, she was satisfied she "had a job for life."

Laughingly, she recalled all six men opponents frequently said in their addresses "all my opponents are perfect gentlemen."

"Of course," she said, "I believe women's place is in the home. Many of us, however, are not fortunate enough to have homes."

WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1934

Veasey Asks Legislature Session Cut

Would Save $50,000 by Shorter Meeting, He Claims.

He Proposes Maryland Assembly Curtail It 30 Days.

Berlin, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Reduction of the 90-day term of the approaching Maryland Legislature to 60 days, carrying an approximate saving in legislative expenses of $50,000 or more to taxpayers, is the object of a movement inaugurated yesterday by State Senator Milton L. Veasey, of Worcester County.

Contrary to the usual custom of assembling Democratic members of the Senate and House of Delegates in caucus the night before the Legislature convenes, Senator Veasey proposes that the caucus be held around the middle of December. Proposals to this effect will be made to Joshua Warfield, of Howard County, chairman of the Democratic State central committee.

If the caucus is held around the middle of December, when selection of a president of the Senate and a speaker of the House can be made, these leaders immediately can start selecting committees, so that when the Legislature convenes January 2 all wheels of the machinery can begin to function at once, according to Senator Veasey's plan.

Under the usual custom the Legislature's work has been delayed indefinitely pending committee appointments and other organization work, postponing all major legislation during the opening month of January, Senator Veasey points out.

"By having the Democratic caucus held around the middle of December, enabling the legislative committee and organization work to be planned before the Legislature convenes," Senator Veasy said, "I feel that the approaching term can be ended after the first 60 days, thereby saving the taxpayers of Maryland over $50,000."

Elected in 1930, Senator Veasy is an outstanding advocate of lower taxes. Legislation he sponsored at the 1933 session effected a saving of approximately $200,000 in 1933 and 1934 to Worcester County taxpayers.

Democrats will have a majority in the membership of both the House and the Senate at the approaching session.

West Virginia Couple Reveal Secret Wedding

Miss Mary Weller Wed to Kenneth Moler at Hagerstown.

Charles Town, W. Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Miss Mary Lee Weller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus W. Weller, Ranson, W. Va., became the bride of Kenneth W. Moler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Moler, of Charles Town, November 17, in the Methodist parsonage at Hagerstown, Md., it was announced today.

Mrs. Moler, a senior in the Charles Town High School, is popular among the members of the younger set here. Besides being a member of the basket ball team of the local school she holds numerous offices in the student body. Mr. Moler is a former manager of the Charles Town High School football team.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—The engagement of their daughter, Louise, was announced yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Finan, Cumberland, to F. DeSales Mudd, son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Mudd, Bryantown, Charles County, Md.

Miss Finan attended Immaculate School, Washington, D. C., and was graduated from Notre Dame College, Baltimore, in 1932. Mr. Mudd, a graduate of Catholic University and Georgetown Law School, Washington, is a member of the law firm of Mudd & Mudd, La Plata, Md.

The wedding will take place next spring.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Mary Frances Perrell, of Hedgesville, to Gilbert Orville Wright, of Washington. The ceremony was performed in Hyattsville, Md., November 22.

Mrs. Wright was a member of the graduating class at Hedgesville High School in 1928, and is also a graduate of a technical school in Washington.

Page County Office Places Unemployed

Luray, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Twenty-eight hundred persons have been registered at Page County's national reemployment office since its opening 14 months ago, according to Miss Lena Steed, manager of the office. Miss Steed says that 900 of these are still unemployed.

About 500 have not reported for some time and it is not known where they are. But the remainder have secured employment, either through the office or elsewhere. About half of the PWA labor on the Skyline drive is secured through this office.

Niclin's Plurality Increased by 26 In Vote Recount

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 29.—C. Ward Niclin, Democrat, who was elected November 6 for the unexpired term of justice of peace of this district, emerged 26 votes better off after a recount by county court, made at the request of George M. Bowers, Republican, his opponent.

Niclin in the first canvass had a lead of 15 votes; and as a result of the recount, after one precinct had disclosed 28 ballots apparently not counted for the Democrats, his lead went to 41, and Bowers conceded the contest.

Teach 'Morals' In School, Says Head of N.E.A.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Teaching of the theory and practice of morals was proposed tonight by Henry Lester Smith, president of the National Education Association, as a means of improving the educational system.

"Education must acknowledge some defects," he said in his address before the Virginia Education Association, now in annual convention here.

"Education has responded too fully to the emphasis our times have been placing upon the material things of life," he continued. "We need character, the spiritual to supplement the material possessions. Clear is the evidence of how suddenly and surely the foundations of material possessions may slip away."

Higher Culture Necessary.

He asserted the education program should have kept clear of material matters; that our Government is regarded as an ideal type and gives justification for optimism, but a lasting civilization can not be sustained on materialism alone.

"A higher culture is necessary," Dr. Smith said; "the culture of literature, art, music, character. When we eradicate some of the errors we have made, our children through our schools will have a more worth-while heritage."

Another general defect of education, the speaker suggested, is the growing tendency to use it "not for the State but for the purpose of furthering the present blind purposes of the State. Russia, Germany and Italy furnish examples of this limitation in education."

Still another defect suggested was "a deep abyss" too often existing "between the formal schools and the vital society for which they are training. Too often theory and practice do not harmonize. One lags behind the other. To correct this evil, invention in social living must be speeded up to the rate of invention in mechanical fields."

Fears "Calamity."

Dr. Smith called upon teachers to band together in the interests of the rights of children in order to save the next generation from calamity.

"We still know education not so definitely for what it is but primarily for what it does," he said, adding that the aims of education "reduce themselves to complete living and preparation for that complete living."

Illustrating the change of educational ideals as guiding principles of the life change, the speaker said that there is a struggle now going on all over the world between the two theories of the control of freedom. Civil control is tending temporarily away from democracy and representative government and toward dictatorship. Before the World War and right after it, however, the principles of democracy were making marked progress in the world.

"Not only was the movement in evidence in civil government; it was equally present in other units of society," Dr. Smith said. "The school was no longer presided over by a taskmaster. Cooperation was being nurtured. In the family the father no longer ruled alone. The members of the family counciled together.

A Constant Warring.

"All down the ages there has been a pulling and tugging by these two forces for power and control. At the moment one of these forces would gain somewhat over the other. There would result a lack of alignment, a maladjustment, and a reorganization of many phases of society followed.

"The struggle is for a working balance between freedom, liberty and initiative on the one hand and control, guidance and repression on the other hand. Education naturally has a place in this struggle and is itself modified by the direction the struggle takes. Education should have the responsibility of aiding in the decision as to just what this balance should be at any period of time or in any particular emergency, and education should have a large part of the responsibility of supporting the final decision as to where to draw that balancing line, whether toward the end of freedom or toward the end of regimentation.

"If the decision is that initiative is to be curbed in the civic, political and business world, that spirit of initiative must be curbed in the training of children and youths and adults. It must be curbed in the school as well as in the home and in other spheres."

Nice's Party Shows Its Luck at Deep-Sea Fishing

Two States Aid Race for Life

Police Help Speed Serum to Youth Near Death at Salisbury.

Salisbury, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Pennsylvania and Delaware State police today joined in a race with death as they helped to speed pneumococcus serum from Philadelphia to the Peninsula General Hospital here, where young Paul E. Watson, jr., lay dying from pneumonia.

The serum was ordered by telephone early this morning. The Pennsylvania motorcycle police guard, sirens screaming through the darkness, escorted the messenger from the Philadelphia laboratory to Tremont, Del., where the Delaware guard took over the race, bringing the messenger down through the Eastern Shore.

The serum arrived before dawn and soon was administered to the patient. That the race may have been won was indicated by the fact the patient still was alive late today.

Watson, the 21-year-old son of the president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank here, has been in the hospital for more than a week. His chance of recovery, it is thought, depends largely upon the serum.

Along the Tri-State Trail

With

C. B. Carr

Post State Editor.

One Harford County, Md., farmer has plenty for which he is thankful. Recently he found an old revenue stamp in his attic carrying the inverted likeness of George Washington. So he sent it to a New York stamp dealer to sell, thinking it would bring a few dollars. Just before Thanksgiving a check for $4,000 came telling him that the moldy stamp was sold for $5,000. Even though the dealer retained 20 per cent for closing the deal, the fortunate farmer, who doesn't want his name mentioned, paid off his mortgage in time to be very, very thankful for Thanksgiving.

Those who depended on the vanishing bootlegger to furnish the alcoholic condiment of the mince pie yesterday probably had a tough time getting anything at all. For the last month Federal agents have been on a still-wrecking spree through Maryland and Virginia. Reports say that more than 100 vats were demolished in Franklin County, Va. Near Hagerstown, in the Frog Hollow area, illegal distillers are still running—from the "revenooers."

Old-timers who tell of traveling three miles through the snow to school will get a "kick" out of this. All classrooms of the Worcester County, Md., schools will be equipped with thermometers that rooms may be kept at an even temperature for the students who ride the three miles to school in an inclosed bus.

Word comes from northern Maryland that turkey thieves are adapting gangster tactics in acquiring and disposing of their booty. In some cases hundreds of "boids" have been hauled away by truck to "fences" in the city. But the tough yegg in quest of his Christmas supply had better keep his eyes peeled. Farmers have rigged up automatic trips on shotguns that "keep duty" day and night.

Membership Price Rises.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—A New York Cotton Exchange membership has been sold for $16,000, an advance of $500 from the previous transaction.

By Erl Roman.

(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

Miami, Fla., Nov. 29.—Governor-elect Harry W. Nice of Maryland, and members of his party who became enthused over deep-sea fishing while they were vacationing here, are homeward bound for Baltimore, but the thrills which they enjoyed while angling for fish in the Gulf Stream probably will be a subject of conversation for many days.

According to Mr. Nice, the thrill of deep-sea fishing alone was enough to keep him in Florida, but the press of forthcoming State affairs made it necessary to turn from pleasure to work.

The Governor-elect appeared to want some of the Miami folks to enjoy the fishing thrills with him. Among those who accompanied the Nice fishing party along the Gulf Stream was a local reporter, who describes the expedition thus:

Official Party Goes Out.

"When the Governor-elect of Maryland and his official party stepped aboard the cruisers Vairene and Bernie M., at pier 5, city yacht basin, they were eager and anxious to try Gulf Stream fishing. Hailing from Baltimore, Md., a city that is closely adjacent the good fishing waters of the Chesapeake Bay, all are natural-born Waltonians. Those in the party who hadn't fished for spot, hardhead and trout in the Chesapeake, had 'cut their eyeteeth' on gudgeons in the smaller streams of Maryland. None in the party made any boasts concerning their individual or collective prowess at the sport of fishing, and they were all willing to be shown. Each maintained a poise of dignity befitting an official party, but with the strike of the first Gulf Stream fish, this dignity went overboard with the same lightning-like rapidity with which the average Marylander gulps down the season's first legal oyster.

"Now, I wasn't on the Vairene, from which vessel the first fish was caught, but it seemed to me that Maryland State Policeman M. E. Katz had the first strike just as the Vairene prepared to cross from the green water into the indigo blue of the Gulf Stream. Our cruiser, containing Gov.-elect Nice, State Senator Harry O. Levin, Robert Irvin, and myself, was a good 200 yards from the Vairene. When Officer Katz felt the strike of the first fish, he said 'good-bye' to his dignity with a shout that reverberated from the Vairene to the Government dredge. This accomplished, Officer Katz proceeded to haul in a 7-pound mackerel. His shout changed the official party on both boats to plain, everyday Gulf Stream fishermen. They all concentrated on fishing and everybody had a swell time.

Few Chances Missed.

"And, very few chances were missed. True, Senator Levin had the hard luck to lose a sailfish after he had fought it to the boat's side, and Bob Irvin lost his when it described a complete parabola in the air and shook the hook, but, altogether, these Maryland boys 'did their stuff' and they came in with good catches. The Governer-elect hooked his first sailfish during the afternoon (without assistance from anybody) and, shortly thereafter, his fish was flopped into the fishbox on the Bernie M. Said he, 'I'm not going to go back to the dock without a sailfish and let that gang in the Vairene give me the horse-laugh'—and he buckled down to the job with the same grim determination that he showed in his fight to be elected the third Republican Governor of the State of Maryland since they started voting in that State a hundred years or more ago.

Each Catch Is Hailed.

"Aboard the Vairene, Officer Katz continued to announce the strike of each fish, regardless of who caught it. Every time a fish struck, Officer Katz shouted. Inasmuch as they averaged a fish every ten minutes or less, this guardian of the laws of Maryland had a job on his hands. But he never faltered once, even though he did become a little hoarse. When Mr. O'Donnell hooked into a sailfish, Officer Katz insisted on referring to the long-snouted fish as a 'whale.' Harold Wells, of the Miami Herald, tried to explain to the officer that it was a sailfish, but Mr. Katz said it looked like a whale to him. Incidentally, Mr. O'Donnell hooked and landed his sailfish without outside help. When it was weighed in at pier 5 it tipped the beam at 61¾ pounds. It was immediately entered in the Hart Hardware Co. contest for the 1934-35 Miami Fishing Emblem and heads the list to date, being the heaviest fish thus far entered.

"So, with everyone catching fish (and there 'ain't' no better way for a Marylander to have a good time), the day was perfect. Governor-elect Nice's son, Harry, jr., not only caught fish but took over the wheel of the Vairene to 'get the feel' of the cruiser. And when the return trip was accomplished and pictures taken, a decision was reached to fish again the following night. 'It's a shame we don't have sailfish in the Chesapeake Bay,' quoth the Governor-elect. 'Maybe its a blessing we don't,' answered Bob Irvin. 'I'd be fishing all the time if we did.'

County Probes King Shooting

Son of New Montgomery Commissioner Holds Own in Hospital.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—The condition of J. Russell King, 32, who was shot in the back by a colored youth at Clarksburg, Md., last night, was described as satisfactory by physicians at City Hospital here today.

King, son of Charles E. King, newly elected Montgomery County commissioner, was critically wounded by the youth, John Brown, 18, who killed himself.

The shooting occurred in front of a store from which King had emerged. Brown accosted him and after a brief conversation, King turned and walked away. The youth fired five shots, one striking King in the back.

Police said Brown fled and stopped about a quarter of a mile away, where he rested a few minutes then shot himself through the heart. A hastily organized posse arrived a moment or two after he had killed himself.

Rockville police said they understood King and Brown had trouble several days ago regarding alleged trespassing by Brown on King's property. It is not known if the trouble was the cause of the shooting.

Wagon Wheels Is Repetition Of Trite Tale

"WAGON WHEELS." Paramount picturization of the novel, "The Fighting Caravan," by Zane Grey, adapted to the screen by Jack Cunningham, featuring Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick, Monte Blue and Billy Lee, with Raymond Hatton, Jan Duggan, Leila Bennett, Olin Howland, J. P. McGowan and James A. Marcus. Directed by Charles Barton. Reviewed Thursday afternoon.

By Nelson B. Bell.

There is a considerable departure here from the customary form and content of the ordinary "Western." In addition to all of the elements of excitement that characterize the conventional "horse opera," there are added to this adventure in pioneering a vague suggestion of historical fact and a musical treatment that is extremely effective.

The chief factor militating against the popular success of "Wagon Wheels" is that the story, in one form or another, has been seen upon the screen innumerable times before—and on at least one or two occasions it has been better done than it is here. Raoul Walsh probably did the best job of all with this specific material when he made "The Big Trail" for Fox, back in 1931.

The Oregon Trail Again.

It is the blazing of the Oregon Trail that constitutes the subject matter of "Wagon Wheels." A sturdy band of homesteaders set out from Independence, Mo., by wagon train to seek new fortunes in the Puget Sound country. They are led by Clint Belmet, chief scout; Jim Burch and Bill O'Meary. In the caravan is Murdock, ostensibly an Indian guide, but in reality a treacherous conspirator with the Indians to prevent the success of the expedition, in order to protect certain trade advantages enjoyed by the fur dealers by whom he is employed.

There ensue the usual Indian attacks, the hardships that are an inescapable part of breaking a new trail across virgin mountain country, the romance between the scout and the young mother attempting to reach the West Coast with her small son; the inevitable hand-to-hand fight between the chief scout and Murdock and the final completion of the long trek in what looks more like a Sequoia grove in California than it does like Oregon.

Music Put to Good Use.

Along the way it is found possible to introduce the song, "Wagon Wheels"—first sung in Washington, I believe, by Everett Marshall during the latter part of the engagement of the then unperfected Shubert conception of what the Zeigfeld "Follies" should be like; a burlesque ballad by Jan Duggan and another beautifully sung soprano number by a voice whose identity I am unable, at the moment, to determine. These musical interludes are reprised from time to time and lend the picture a quality unusual in a film so largely dedicated to Indian raids and roughing it.

Although the story elements are loosely laced together, and as authentic drama the piece never quite jells, there are a few outstanding performances that partially atone for these dramaturgic defects. Foremost among them is the remarkably precocious bit of juvenility contributed to the development of the romantic side of the tale, such as it is, by a youngster named Billy Lee.

Bolsters His Elders.

This little fellow, cast as the son of the lone young woman making the long trek on her own, does much to inflate the parts played by both Gail Patrick, as his mother, and Randolph Scott, as Belmet.

Among the characters of secondary importance, Raymond Hatton, wholly unrecognizable under a mop of white hair and whiskers; Monte Blue, as Murdock, the renegade guide; Leila Bennett and Jan Duggan, as sisters of opposite bents, and Olin Howland, cast as Bill O'Meary, do most to keep the play from falling completely apart.

There is a prodigal display of majestic Western scenery to furnish a rugged background for the major adventures of a band of intrepid souls as rugged as that late nonagenarian, Ezra Meeker, who helped blaze the original Oregon Trail and was a frequent visitor in Washington up to the time of his death a few years ago.

Supplementary Attractions.

The supplementary attractions are numerous and diversified. Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt has reassembled a considerable footage of his old Arctic material to make "The Search for Santa Claus" a seasonable excursion to the purported home in the North of jolly old Kris Kringle, and the newsreel abounds with timely pictured events.

Two short subjects of more than ordinary interest are Vitaphone's "Songs That Live," starring Gus Edwards, the old-time star-maker, and "The Little Dutch Mill," a cartoon comedy in natural colors that is more philosophical than funny.

For the benefit of those who may wish to enjoy the melodramatic exuberances of "Wagon Wheels," it is no more than fair to say that this Zane Grey yarn will be on view at the Metropolitan through the daylight hours of next Monday, December 3, only. The last unreeling of this film will begin Monday at 4:30 o'clock. Upon its conclusion the doors will be closed until 7:45 p. m., when the sale of tickets for "Flirtation Walk" will begin.

"Flirtation Walk," the Hawaiian-West Point story, co-starring Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, with Pat O'Brien and a practically swell cast, was so eminently successful during its recent week at the Earle that it is being moved into the Metropolitan for one Monday night showing, and continuous presentations thereafter, to take full advantage of the public's enthusiasm over its zippy story and catchy songs. It is by far the best thing Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler have done.

So if you want to see those Indians shooting their flaming arrows into the kerosene wagon, you'll have to hurry.

Critics Go to the Polls.

The time has rolled around again already and it hardly seems possible.

I mean to say that Jack Alicoate, formerly of this estimable family journal and now editor and publisher of the Film Daily, one of the motion picture industry's important trade papers, has sent out the lists, the blanks and the nudge for the dramatic desks of the country to get busy and make up their minds which were the "ten best pictures" released between November 1, 1933, and October 31, 1934.

The list of eligible pictures contains in the neighborhood of 500 titles. It is highly improbable that any motion picture editor in the United States has seen them all, and, as has been pointed out here before, any attempt to pick the ten best, therefore, must be an undertaking of some futility.

Last year approximately 400 motion picture critics took part in the poll and the result of their deliberations was a fairly accurate reflection of what may easily have been the best pictures of that year.

As I recall it, seven of our selections were included in the final list of the year's ten best. The going is a little tougher this year and we have scant hope of batting .700 again.

At any rate, out of such of the 500 eligible pictures as we saw, we know what we liked. That, at least, is something, although I wouldn't attempt to say precisely what!

It might be well to consult the "Film Time Tables" appearing elsewhere on this page—I hope—before launching forth for the Earle Theater to enjoy the bill headlined by Jimmy Cagney in "The St. Louis Kid" on the screen and by Eddie Peabody, the world's premier banjoist, on the stage. Five de luxe performances, if that is what they are, are being given today, with the first projection of the feature picture beginning at 10 a. m., which, I reiterate, is to all intents and purposes the middle of the night.

If You Like Music.

Two features of special interest will be encountered by those who attend Loew's Fox this week to see Anna Sten come to life as star of "We Live Again," the new film version of Count Leo Tolstoy's novel of "Resurrection," in which the principal male role is taken by Fredric March.

The Russian A Cappella Choir supplies the musical background for the beautiful and reverently impressive Russian Easter midnight service—something that can not be found in the Russia of the present day—and in another colorful sequence a Gypsy chorus is led by Nina Koshetz, famous opera star, and Khmara, the world's foremost interpreter of Gypsy songs and music.

When Elissa Landi is seen in what is reputedly her best role to date in the screen version of Brock Pemberton's stage success, "Enter Madame," you will want to remember Nina Koshetz, because it is she who does all the singing Miss Landi semes to do. Her gorgeous operatic voice was "dubbed in" to create a perfect illusion of an opera star, which is what Miss Landi is supposed to be in the picture.

Amid ceremonies of appropriate solemnity, Manager Orangelo Ratto, of Loew's Palace Theater, yesterday noon was commissioned a colonel on the staff of Gov. Ruby Laffoon, of Kentucky, suh, and I wouldn't kid you about it. The framed commission was presented to Angie with a few well-chosen and pointed remarks by George Jessel, who last night completed a week of headlining the stage bill at Loew's Fox.

The presentation came as a complete surprise to Col. Ratto, who thought he was attending a business meeting of the Variety Club, in their quarters in the Willard Hotel, when the commission was popped at him. What he actually was attending was a theatrical breakfast at which he, unknowingly, and Georgie Jessel were the guests of honor. The whole thing was planned by Carter Barron, Eastern division manager for Loew's, Inc. Those in attendance at the Kentucky breakfast of junior juleps, grapefruit, rice flakes, wheat cakes, country sausage and such like, included theatrical, newspaper, radio and newsreel friends with whom Col. Ratto long has been associated in Washington.

I suspect that it was Arthur De Titta, of the Fox Movietone News, who rigged up the cablegram in Italian that seemed to come from Benito Mussolini, Il Duce, himself, upbraiding Col. Ratto for deserting the cause of the Fascisti and going Laffoon.

Perplexity Note.

What I want to know now is, do we corporals serving under General Depression have to wear broadswords and fatigue uniforms and salute Col. Ratto every time we want to go to the Palace?

If the good Col. Ratto thinks we're going to, he's not a kernel, he's a nut, beggin' you-all's pahdon, suh!

Opening Today in New Pictures

At left above is "The St. Louis Kid," in the person of James Cagney, who is appearing in that role on the screen at the Earle Theater, supported by Patricia Ellis and Allen Jenkins. At right, Anna Sten, as she appears in the stellar role of "We Live Again," a splendid picturization of Count Leo Tolstoy's novel of "Resurrection," now on view at Loew's Fox. Fredric March plays opposite Miss Sten in this subject, which marks her highest achievement to date.

Straight From the Studios

Character Actors Come High in Studio Exchanges; Colony in a Quandary Over Garbo's Next; Pithy Paragraphs and Previews.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 29.—The stock of the character actor seems to be undergoing a sudden and unpremeditated inflation if a recent trade tells the trend. To secure one character man, Alan Hale, for "The Crusades," in which he will do the part of Blondell, Paramount had to lend RKO two players, Randolph Scott for "Roberta" in the leading romantic role, and Helen Mack for "Cape Cod."

MARGUERITE CHURCHILL.

The deal is important as showing the demand for Hale after his brief spot in "It Happened One Night" and bigger role in "Little Man, What Now?" It also lifts Scot out of the routine of Western pictures and puts him right opposite the singing star, Irene Dunne. Further, it returns Miss Mack to the studio where she was originally under contract.

Cecil DeMille still wants Helen Hayes for the feminine lead in "The Crusades." Elissa Landi and Sylvia Sidney, however, are being considered and the part eventually may go to some one entirely unknown as yet.

Beery, Jr., Up Again.

Noah Beery, jr., gets his second chance to follow in the footsteps of his father. Universal had him under contract a short time two years ago, but he didn't seem quite mature enough for a steady acting career. Young Beery has just turned 21 now and has been engaged again for a year's time.

It seems he made quite an impression in the serial "Tailspin Tommy" and the studio feels he can be groomed satisfactorily for feature pictures. There is talk of his playing in "Showboat" and "Diamond Jim."

Garbo Film Debated.

While "Anna Karenina" and "Joan of Arc" have been mentioned from time to time as probable Greta Garbo pictures, it is understood that various other stories are being considered for this star. In fact, quite a number of them. So don't count too much on her appearing in either the Tolstoy subject or as the Maid of Orleans.

"Imitation of Life" Previewed on Coast.

Arrival of another picture in the best of taste is to be heralded. It will wring tears from the women audience, and is broad enough in its human appeal to touch the hearts of most men as well. It is concerned, however, mostly with the emotions, the accomplishments and the interests of feminine characters.

"Imitation of Life" is directed by John Stahl with Claudette Colbert and Warren William as its featured players, but a huge volume of the credit goes to Louise Beavers for her interpretation of the Negro mammy in the plot, and to Dorothy Black and Fredi Washington as the daughters of this character. Ned Sparks, Rochelle Hudson, Alan Hale, Henry Armetta and little Baby Jane Quigley are others to be noted.

It is an enriching experience to view this film. It is excellently acted and directed with great feeling. Slight discrepancies are completely overshadowed by the effect as a whole, and remarkable from a technical standpoint is the dealing with the plot and counterplot so closely interwoven.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—A belligerent Virginia football team rose in mighty wrath to outplay a powerhouse North Carolina aggregation for two periods before a crowd of 9,000 at Scott Stadium here today, but all their mighty wrath and consistently good playing in the second and third periods did not affect the final score, which was North Carolina, 25; Virginia, 6.

Capt. George Barclay, North Carolina's tackle, candidate for all-American honors, scored the first touchdown early in the first quarter. His example was quickly followed by Don Jackson and Harry Montgomery, who trotted across the goal line for the Tarheel's other two touchdowns in the first period. In the third quarter Dick Buck accounted for the fourth and final North Carolina trip across the goal line.

Johnson Cavalier Star.

Capt. Tom Johnson led the Cavaliers' rebellion by riding roughshod over his opposition's line time and time again in the third period to account finally for the Virginian's lone tally.

Virginia's stand against the stanch Carolina aggregation, which has been beaten only by Tennessee this season, was one of the most startling exhibitions of sheer will to win ever witnessed on a Southern gridiron. Outclassed and even outnumbered by the North Carolina squad—which was present in full force—the Cavaliers rose to supreme heights to hold their opposition scoreless and almost helpless in the second quarter and to score their touchdown in the third period. All of which to no avail in the long run.

Intercepted Pass.

Barclay's jaunt was made on an intercepted pass, tossed by Garnett on his own 45 and intended for Johnson. Barclay snared the ball exactly in midfield and wiggled down the field across the goal line. Daniels' attempt to convert from placement was blocked by Fryberger.

Shortly thereafter Garnett punted to Jackson, who received the ball in midfield and trotted back to the 8-yard line before he was dropped by Garnett. Hutchins

Deming's Field Goal Rises Out of the Mire to Bring G. W. Victory

Harry Deming, big George Washington tackle and field goal kicking specialist, is seen booting the placement goal that defeated Oklahoma yesterday at Griffith Stadium. Tuffy Leemans held the ball for Deming on the 17-yard line. Note the reflections of the players in the water and mud, ample evidence that the gridiron was a quagmire.

Colonials' Big Tackle Hero as 6,000 Watch Teams Battle in Mire

By Lewis F. Atchison.

It was from this point that Harry Deming, a huge, damp tarbaby in his mud-spattered uniform, planted his foot squarely in the middle of an inflated hunk of mud and sent it hurtling over the crossbar for the points that gave the Colonials a 3-to-0 victory over Oklahoma's Sooners.

It was a terrific battle of the elements against 22 hardy young men who, fortunately, knew how to keep afloat on a rising young lake and play football, too. You've heard of ankle-deep mud, no doubt, but this mud didn't stop at the ankles. It went all the way up.

About 6,000 fans who like football better than turkey, saw the Colonials ring down the curtain on their football season. It was the downtown school's first victory in the final game of a season since 1924, when they topped Catholic University.

Deming not only kicked the winning field goal, but paved the way for it by recovering "Cash" Gentry's fumble on Oklahoma's 26-yard line early in the second period. Gentry, who was the Sooners' whole offense in the season's lengthiest punting duel, was injured in the third quarter and forced to retire from action. He carried Oklahoma's hopes for victory to the bench with him.

Gentry muffed a bad pass from center on an attempted kick. He tried to get back to the line of scrimmage, but was felled by a small section of the G. W. student body, losing the ball as he went under for the second time. Deming made a swan dive for it and came up with the leather hugged to his chest on the 26. It looked like the turning point of the afternoon's festivities.

Tuffy Leemans and a 5-yard offside penalty made it first down on Oklahoma's 15-yard line, and G. W. appeared to be headed for a touchdown. But Oklahoma braced, and three stabs at the line left the Buff and Blue an arm's length from another first down.

Kicking Duel.

Rather than risk the loss of a scoring opportunity Quarter Back Jenkins called for a placement, with Deming kicking and Leemans holding the ball. The rotund biologist delivered a clean boot that rebounded off the bleacher wall to the echo of the Colonial fans' triumphant shouts.

The game developed into a kicking duel with both teams waiting for the breaks. Both elevens tried their running attacks and found

MUNICIPAL STADIUM, Baltimore, Nov. 29.—University of Maryland, meeting its traditional rival, Johns Hopkins, here today, had an unexpectedly stubborn battle in a sea of mud, but made a successful voyage by the score of 19 to 0.

Although held to three touchdowns in their final game of the season, the Old Liners outplayed the Blue Jays in every department. Figures best show Maryland's supremacy. The Old Liners made 19 first downs, while limiting their opponents to 1. They gained 305 yards by rushing to 34, and they gained 40 yards by passing to none for the Johnnies.

Widmyer, singing his collegiate swan song along with Crecca, Half Back Dick Nelson, Norwood Sothoron, All-Southern back, and a flock of other stalwart Old Liners, scored the first touchdown early in the opening quarter.

He grabbed a 15-yard pass flipped by Nelson 5 yards over the goal line. The try for extra point failed.

In the second quarter, Maryland made a 40-yard drive, with a pass, Nelson to Ellinger, setting off the

Alabama Rolls Over Vanderbilt, 34 to 0

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 29 (U.P.). The big Red Tide of Alabama today swept over the Vanderbilt Commodores, 34 to 0, winning a second consecutive Southeastern Conference title and bolstering its chances for an invitation to the Rose Bowl.

The Commodores, playing their twilight game for that grand old man of Dixie football, Dan McGugin, were helpless before the power rushes of Demyanovich and Angelich and the deceptive, elusive running of the Tide's All-American half back, Dixie Howell.

It was Alabama's ninth victory of the season, giving the Tide a perfect record for 1934—a record of no defeats or ties and a total of 287 points scored to 32 for opponents.

The Tide, already asked to participate in the Sugar Bowl tournament, a New Year's Day gridiron classic at New Orleans, was believed certain to receive from Stanford tonight a fourth invitation to the Rose Bowl.

Howell, playing his last scheduled game for the Crimson Tide, closed his career in true All-American style, negotiating several long broken-field runs and rifling passes with unerring accuracy. He made two touchdowns. An ovation was accorded him as he walked from the field in the fourth quarter.

Southern sports writers and Vanderbilt alumni paid tribute to Coach McGugin in a brief ceremony preceding the game that ended his 30-year tenure as coach of the Commodores.

Punts were exchanged twice before Alabama opened a 65-yard march for the first touchdown in the opening period. Lucas punted out of bounds on the Alabama 35. Howell raced around right end for 20. Angelich charged through center and sprinted 40 yards, being hauled down from behind by Oliver on the Vandy five. Demyanovich plowed right guard for two, and Angelich circled end for a touchdown. Smith converted from placement.

Vanderbilt made only one play before the Tide rushed down field for another touchdown. Hutson kicked off to Peebles, who fumbled, but recovered on the Vandy 10. Lucas punted out of bounds on the Alabama 37. Howell slashed tackle for 3 yards. Angelich thundered through center for 18, and Demyanovich added 9 at left guard. Howell made 2 at center. Bryant, on the Tide's end around play, contributed 9. Howell, aided by savage blocking, sprinted around right end for 21 yards and a touchdown. Smith failed to convert.

A 43-yard punt returned by Howell enabled the Tidemen to score the next touchdown. Howell took Lucas' punt on the Alabama 43, and wove back to the Vandy 24. Angelich blasted through center for 10. Demyanovich, on a left-end run, added 11. Demyanovich went over from the 3-yard line in two tries. Smith converted.

Coach Frank Thomas sent in his scrubs and the half ended without further scoring.

Regulars Return to Game.

Carnera and Campolo End Training for Bout

Buenos Aires, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—Primo Carnera, of Italy, former world heavyweight champion, and Victorio Campolo, of Argentina, completed training today for Saturday's 12-round bout. Promoters predict a gate of more than $80,000.

It will be Carnera's first comeback attempt since losing his title to Max Baer last summer. Meanwhile, Paulino Uzcudun, veteran Spanish heavyweight, is training nearby to meet the winner.

Howard Comes From Behind To Trim Lincoln Team, 13-6

COMING from behind in a downpour of rain, the Bison eleven of Howard University yesterday defeated the Lions of Lincoln, 13-6, before a crowd of about 5,000 in the university stadium.

Amid a blare of trumpets, Lincoln kicked off, Amprey receiving the ball and running it back 10 yards to be downed on the Howard 30. The Lincoln line held and Sutler punted to Burgess, who was downed on the Lincoln 48. Following an exchange of punts and a scrimmage in which Johnston and Sutler rushed the ball for two first downs, the oval went over to Lincoln on her 20-yard stripe.

Burgess fell back for a punt as the rain came down in torrents and dashed off around the Howard left end instead of 75 yards and a touchdown. Burgess failed for the extra point.

Anderson received the next kickoff on the Howard 20 and ran it back 5 yards. On the next play, off tackle he went, while the clouds emptied themselves, and in a beautiful exhibition of broken-field running, zigzagged through the entire Lincoln team to even the score. Howard took command when Johnston went off tackle for the extra point.

A few minutes later, at the opening of the second period, following a Bison march down the field, Anderson went around the Lincoln left end 10 yards to their 4-yard line. His first try for goal through the line was to no avail. Williams skirted end 3 yards to the Lincoln 1. The Lions held 1 foot from their line, but Anderson went off tackle on the next play for the final count of the game.

Bowie Feature Goes by Nose To Dust Girl

Evergold, Stablemate, Is Second; Meade Rides Winning Horse.

By Walter Haight.

IT WAS NOT a day for a "hunch" bet on Dust Girl. The 17,000 persons at Bowie yesterday afternoon saw more rain than has fallen since Sadie Thompson made famous the tropical deluge of the Isle of Pago Pago. But Dust Girl must have sensed the fact that the day was hers for she dominated both the start and the finish of the annual running of the Thanksgiving Handicap, closing day feature at the Prince Georges County race track.

Straining every muscle and not knowing whether the horse that was sliding up on her at the finish was friend or foe, Dust Girl won by a nose from Evergold, her stable mate. A length and a half away came Chatmoss, a representative of the "field," with the hopes of the seven other stables floundering at various intervals along the muddy stretch.

Both Dust Girl and Evergold are members of the Shandon Farm, owned and operated by the Nash Brothers, of Chicago, and they ran equally powerful races. Dust Girl, ridden by Don Meade, set the pace from start to finish, while Evergold came from far back in the field to give the Nash Brothers a double grip on the eagerly-sought purse.

Dust Girl Unruly.

Dust Girl, named for her sire, Brooms, and heretofore an inconspicuous 3-year-old filly, put on a show for the crowd that began when the field left the paddock gate. She broke out of the parade and gave Jockey Meade a workout before the field reached the post. She walked through the stall gate and then went through a series of gymnastics that all but tossed Meade to the muddy track.

After seven minutes, Starter Milton lost patience with the unruly filly and ordered her placed on the outside where she imitated a pinwheel while an assistant starter held her bit. Her head was sideways when the starting bell rang. Identify and Only One, on the inside, fought a momentary battle for the lead, but Meade carried Dust Girl up the outside rail and then cut over. Dust Girl banked the clubhouse turn in front, followed by Only One, Identify and High Glee. Evergold was in the second flight along with Thursday, the favorite, and Silent Shot.

Jockey Meade rode as if his life depended on the outcome of the race. He was not saving Dust Girl for the finish as he rode desperately up the back stretch. Only One and Identify were still closest as the far turn was reached. The expected moves of Thursday and Silent Shot failed to materialize, but the mud-spattered Evergold answered Sammy Renick's call for closing speed.

Leader Tires.

In the stretch, Meade continued to carry the now tiring Dust Girl along, as Chatmoss and Evergold splashed up. It was the old race finish story. Would a tiring horse outlast a fast-charging horse? Many in the crowd did not recognize Evergold, half covered by mud.

With Meade and Renick working like little Trojans the pair fought

Smukler of Temple Meets His Waterloo

By Paul Gallico.

TEMPLE STADIUM, Philadelphia, Nov. 29.—There was a considerable expeditionary force of experts from New York and other parts who foreswore their mid-day Thanksgiving meal to peer at a possible All-American candidate coached by Master Glenn Scobey Warner, late of the Stanford University. This young hero is named Dave Smukler, and he comes from Gloversville, N. Y., a place which is called Gloversville because they make gloves there. His position is full back for the Temple University football team.

Poor chap, he met with the usual run of luck. Playing in comparative privacy all year, the one game in which the spotlight was turned on him naturally turned out to be his worst. Or rather Temple's worst.

Moral Triumph.

The collegiates of the candidate for Valhalla gave him no assistance whatsoever. The stooge selected for Smukler's performance was Bucknell, which comes from Lewisburg, Pa. At the end of the ball game, the score was: Bucknell 0, Temple 0. Master Smukler was considerably deflated, and Bucknell won itself a handsome moral victory.

One felt sorry for Smukler, a fine driving back, a good passer and a willing and able blocker, but sorrier for old Pop Warner, who in his second year at Temple as head coach produced an unbeaten team and when his labors were done and gray hairs added to his thatch, I am afraid he found that it didn't matter very much. It is just Temple's unbeaten team. It won't be asked to visit the Rose Bowl and it won't be rated in the national championships. But I guess his team gave Pop some satisfaction and that is about all.

Are His Dividends.

Satisfaction, and memories, too, are Pop's dividends. The Temple colors are cherry and white, but it might be cardinal and white, and when the boys first run out on to the field, Pop's old eyes might be looking at his famous Stanford Indians. However, it should be said that as soon as the ball is put into play all illusion is shattered. It doesn't go beyond the color of the uniforms.

The explanation of the zero-zero score is simple enough. Bucknell could only gain in its own territory, and Temple couldn't gain at all. But undefeated Temple was the prize exhibit here today and it was the Bucknell line that spoiled the party.

Worthy of Study.

This Bucknell line was a curious affair and worthy of scientific study. It was composed of a number of runty individuals, short, squat, powerful. The boys had their own style of line play based upon, apparently, and suited to peculiar physiques with which nature had endowed them. When the Temple line charged them, they merely arose and turned around, and Mas-

Giants, Bears Clinch Grid Pro Titles

New Yorkers Win, 27-0; Chicagoans Nose Out Detroit, 19-16.

New York, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—The New York Giants today clinched the right to meet the Chicago Bears for the championship of the National Football League by beating the Brooklyn Dodgers, 27-0, before 18,000 fans at Ebbet's Field.

DETROIT, Nov. 29 (AP).—Scoring all their points through the air, a versatile Chicago Bears eleven today defeated the Detroit Lions, 19 to 16, to clinch the Western Division championship of the National Professional Football League.

In the toe of Jack Manders, Bear full back and former Minnesota star, lay the difference which gave the Chicago club its twelfth straight victory this fall and the Detroit team its second defeat in a dozen starts. Manders booted two field goals, both in the third period, more than matching the one kicked by Glen Presnell, Lion quarterback, in the second.

Break Plays Big Part.

A break of the game, opportunely seized by Zeller, Bear guard, played a big part in the Bear victory. With the score 16 to 13 in the Lions' favor in the final period, Zeller intercepted "Ace" Gutowsky's pass on the Chicago 46 and raced to the Detroit four before Gutowsky hauled him down. Two smashes at the Detroit line gained only 2 yards. Then Nagurski, Bear full back, faked a plunge and pushed a soft, floating pass over the piled-up linemen to Bill Hewitt, in the end zone. Nagurski's conversion attempt was blocked.

Another break resulted in Detroit's first touchdown. With the Bears in possession on their own 36, Mitchell, Detroit end, intercepted a partially blocked pass from Brumbaugh, and ran to the Chicago 4 before being sopped. Gutowsky plunged over for the touchdown and Dutch Clark drop-kicked the extra point.

The Bears tied the count early in the second period when Keith Molesworth passed 14-yards to

Tennessee Blanks Kentucky, 19 to 0

The victory kept intact the record of Maj. Bob Neyland of never losing to a Kentucky team during his nine-year regime as Tennessee coach. The Wild Cats, however, have played three ties with the Volunteers during Neyland's regime.

Tennessee scored a touchdown in the first seven minutes of play after an 80-yard drive, added another on the second play of the second period and then scored again late in the final period. Gallant goal line stands by Kentucky stopped three other scoring threats.

Georgetown Coaches Fear McNally of Western Maryland More Than Shepherd

Joe Saverine May Start In Game

Hoyas to Hold Lengthy Drill Today, Ending Preparations.

GEORGETOWN dispensed with football practice yesterday while Western Maryland was busy grinding out an easy 26-0 victory over Mount St. Mary's. But today the Hoyas will have a long workout in final preparation for tomorrow's game with the Terrors at Baltimore.

Head Coach Jack Hagerty and his assistants, George Murtaugh and Mush Dubofsky, scouted the Terrors yesterday and were visibly impressed by their power. Hagerty thinks the game will be Georgetown's toughest of the season.

The Hilltop tutors are not worried about Bill Shepherd, the leading scorer of the Nation, as much as Johnny McNally, his running mate. Last season McNally caused Georgetown as much trouble as Shepherd, although the latter received all of the credit.

Considered Logical Move.

Hagerty suspects that Dick Harlow, the Terrors' coach, will spring an attack built around McNally. This is considered the logical move, since Georgetown will have its collective eye on Shepherd's every move.

Supporters of the Blue and Gray were heartened by the news that Capt. Joe Saverine may be able to start tomorrow. Saverine was kept out of the Maryland battle because of an ailing knee and his absence undoubtedly made a huge difference in the team's play.

Chubby Parcells, Joe Meglen and Wally Herron are certain to be in the back field for the opening kickoff. Bob Ferrara, a chunky, hard-hitting half back, will team with them if Saverine is kept on the bench.

Wards Against Staleness.

Georgetown has had only two days of real preparation for the Terrors. Hagerty has a wholesome respect for the Harlow machine, but decided to risk a few practice sessions in deference to having the men go stale.

A victory over the undefeated Terrors undoubtedly would be Georgetown's greatest accomplishment of the year, but the task appears to be a hopeless one. The up-State aggregation reigns a 2-1 favorite over its rival on a basis of past performances. Those who saw the Terrors beat Catholic U., 2 to 0, will agree that they pack a stiffer punch than Georgetown.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 29 (AP).—Pennsylvania's speedy, aggressive young football team closed its season triumphantly today by outscoring its old rival, Cornell, 23 to 13, in an exciting race for touchdowns on a rain-soaked gridiron.

A Thanksgiving Day crowd of 45,000 saw the Quakers gallop into a 16-point lead in the first half by cashing in on all their scoring opportunities, and then survive a smashing come-back by the gallant Ithacans in the last two periods.

Stages Comeback.

Apparently hopelessly licked after yielding two touchdowns and a field goal to Penn's brilliant attack, ably directed by Quarter Back Frank Murray, Cornell rallied and completely outplayed the Quakers in the last half. The Ithacans tallied touchdowns in each of the last two periods and threatened to score two more with a combined running and passing attack, only to have one of their thrusts bounce back at them in the form of a 76-yard gallop for Penn's third touchdown by Bill Shanahan, substitute back.

Shanahan's dash, the longest gain and the most spectacular play of the game, followed his interception of a pass thrown by Cornell's captain, Walter Switzer, as the Ithacans were pounding along from Penn's 35-yard line. Aided by fine blocking, Shanahan raced unchecked up the side lines and scored the points that ended Cornell's lingering hopes of pulling the game out of the fire.

Rushes Ball 69 Yards.

Cornell came back again, however, and rushed over its second touchdown on a sustained drive of 69 yards, with Al Frederick, of Elmira, N. Y., bucking the last half-foot to score after he had alternated with Bill Condon and Jack Batten, a triple-threat sophomore newcomer, in battering Penn's weary line.

This touchdown came on the last scrimmage of the game and, as Cornell lined up for the try for extra point, Pennsylvania paid a striking tribute to one of its injured scrubs, Peter Suffredini, by sending him into the game to get his letter. Suffredini, a 133-pound back who broke his left arm playing with the junior varsity against Villanova this season, had never played as a varsity man in three years on the squad.

them useless. George Washington gained only 66 yards from scrimmage and Oklahoma was even weaker with only 37. Oklahoma failed to make any first downs and the host team registered only three.

After the first period play was always in the Sooners' territory, excepting for a brief space when Koker scooped up a blocked kick, Tuffy Leemans', and sloshed 40 yards to G. W.'s 10-yard mark, where Hank Strayer pulled him down from behind. Koker was the fastest man on the visiting squad but he's not a mudder.

This thrilling play, the liveliest action of the entire game, occurred late in the final period with G. W. holding the ball at midfield. Leemans dropped back to punt, but Parks, the visiting center, threw himself in front of the ball and it rebounded toward the middle of the field where Koker pounced on it and started running.

George Washington's line hurled back two charges and the referee carried the Sooners back five more for being off-side before Francis passed to Poynor. It was good for only 4 yards and the goal line was still 16 yards away. Stacy tried a placement, but it was blocked. Hanken recovered for G. W. and ran the ball back to midfield just as the game ended.

Quantico Marines Beat Shenandoah

Quantico, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Curly Hill, Shenandoah College mentor and former Quantico Marine, almost upset his former buddies in the game between the two teams here today that ended in a 6-to-0 score in favor of the Marines.

Two costly fumbles deprived the collegians of a possible victory or tie. Quantico put the ball in scoring position in the first few minutes of play when they recovered a Shenandoah fumble on the Hornets' 10-yard line. On the fourth play Shess, on a delayed buck, went over for the only score of the game; his try for extra point was blocked. In the second period Shenandoah made a steady drive for 60 yards, only to lose the ball on the 2-yard line by a fumble. Four players wound up their playing careers on a Shenandoah team when Capt. Cross, Newt Hank Gostowski and Joe Maloney walked off the field at the conclusion of the contest.

Northwest Loses To Shenandoah

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). The Shenandoah Athletic Club pounded out a 18-to-0 victory over the Northwest Athletic Club of Washington here today before a crowd of 800. The Red Devils opened their attack with power plays, and in the first quarter Shaver went over for the first tally. At no time during the game were the visitors in Shenandoah's territory, and the ball remained in striking distance of the Northwest goal for most of the afternoon. The Red Devil attack was centered around Payne, fleet quarter back, while Lewis and Pedone were the mainsprings of the Northwest team.

Generals Take Conference Grid Title

Tops South Carolina, 14-7; All of Touchdowns Made on Passes.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 29 (AP).—Washington and Lee flashed a lightning passing attack in the second and fourth periods today for a 14-to-7 victory over South Carolina and a clear title to the Southern Conference championship.

The Gamecocks' touchdown, also on an aerial, came as the climax of a first quarter in which they stepped from their underdog role to run rampant over the Generals before 9,000 spectators.

Until they lapsed into play that brought four 15-yard penalties in quick succession, the lighter South Carolina forwards fought the 200-pound Virginia line off its feet.

Marches 60 Yards.

Washington and Lee started its big Blue steamroller after the half for 60 yards on the only long drive of the day, but had its power shut off with a snap on the Gamecock 21 and passed futilely over the goal.

Sam Mattox, of Washington and Lee, and Tom Craig, of South Carolina, two captians and members of famous football families playing their last college games, finished their careers in a blaze of glory.

Mattox, last of a line of General stars dating back to 1919, passed 21 and 31 yards for his team's two touchdowns, kicked both extra points and narrowly missed booting a field goal near the end of the game.

Snares 14-Yard Pass.

Craig, towering mountain boy, caught the 14-yard pass that netted the Gamecock's score, swung out of the line to gain 17 yards on three runs from scrimmage, and played a magnificent defensive end.

Shepherd Leading Nation's Scorers

Westminster, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Bill Shepherd, All-Eastern back, became the Nation's leading scorer with 120 points today as he led Western Maryland to a 26-0 homecoming day victory over St. Mary's.

Cross-Country Run Won by Bill Agee

Baltimore Star, Victor by 100 Yards Over Leiss, Capital Youth.

BILL AGEE, rugged 28-year-old newspaper agent of Baltimore and former Olympic runner, plodded steadily through a driving rain yesterday morning to win the first annual 10,000-meter cross-country run of the District A. A. U. by a margin of 100 yards.

Taking the lead at the three-quarter mile mark, the Marylander led the fast field of 44 starters up the hills and down the dales of Rock Creek Park for the remaining 5 miles and a half. He finished 17 1-5 seconds ahead of John Leiss, former Tech High athlete, running under the colors of the Washington Track and Field Club.

Hopkins Wins Team Title.

The well-balanced team from Johns Hopkins University easily took the honors with a low-point total of 22. Baltimore Cross Country Club was second with 53 points, and Catholic University third with 129. No prize was given to the team champion, however.

Catholic University beat out the Washington Track and Field Club by 1 point to win the District team championship, 27 to 28. The Cardinals were awarded the Y. M. C. A. trophy, emblematic of the title.

Baltimore Cross Country Club won the Olmstead Grill trophy awarded to the out-of-town club with the best score. The winners had 25 points to Stonewall Democratic Club's 30. Johns Hopkins easily won the Fred Buchholz Cup for the collegiate team championship, 15 to 40.

The District individual championship went to Leiss, the runner-up honors to George Shorb, unattached and the third-place medal to F. L. Church, of the University of Maryland. Visiting runners were not eligible for the District title.

Fifty-four-year-old Mike Lynch, of the Washington Track and Field Club, finished ahead of 14 competitors. Shorb, former Central High runner, beat Church out for the second-place District honors by barely 5 seconds. The order of the finish:

Staunton Tops Fork Union

STAUNTON, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Staunton Military Academy won the prep school championship of Virginia here today by defeating Fork Union Military Academy, 6-0.

Fork Union uncorked a passing attack which proved effective except deep in Staunton territory. Demurro heaved 16 passes to have eight of them completed for short gains in the last three quarters. The contest was marred by frequent fumbles, the field being several inches in mud throughout.

Staunton this year defeated Camp Dern, of Luray; Hargrave Military Academy, University of Virginia Reserves, Woodberry Forest School, Massanutten Military Academy, Fishburne Military School, Augusta Military Academy and Fork Union. It lost to the Washington and Lee Reserves, 7 to 6, and was tied by Mercersburg Academy.

Augusta Defeats Fishburne, 7 to 6

Recovery of Fumble Leads to Winning Points.

Augusta Military Academy, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Augusta Military Academy defeated Fishburne, 7-6, at Claybold today in a sea of mud. Fishburne scored in the opening minutes of the first quarter after St. Clair ran 30 yards to Augusta's 10-yard line. On the second play, St. Clair passed to Preddy for the score.

In the second Augusta recovered a fumble on Fishburne's 10-yard line. Keegen, Augusta quarter back, jammed at Fishburne's line for six tries and a touchdown and Keegen plunged over for the extra point.

Keegen, outstanding star of the game, was ably supported by Capt. Allan and Carlan in the back field. Maloney, Pennybacker and Nickson were the stars in Augusta's line. St. Clair, speedy Fishburne back, kept the Augusta boys in trouble all afternoon, while Preddy, Masters and Mandleson bore the brunt of the defensive work.

Terrors to Rely On Passes in G. U. Game

Team Goes in Hiding for Rest; New Offensive Will Be Used.

WESTMINSTER, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—With an easy homecoming day victory over Mount St. Mary's behind them, Western Maryland's Terrors have hidden themselves away for a brief rest preparatory to their season's windup with Georgetown University in Baltimore Saturday.

Faced with the task of outguessing the heavy Hoya line, the Terrors plan to cut loose with an aerial offensive in the curtain-dropper. Georgetown has been scored on three times, twice with passes and once through the line, and Coach Dick Harlow figures the overhead route may clinch a victory.

Shepherd In Condition.

Bill Shepherd, the Nation's top scorer as a result of today's game, will be in prime condition to lead the Terror offensive through the ace-in-the-hole offensive plays Harlow has kept back throughout the season. The plays originally were set up for Boston, but were not used then nor in later games.

Bill Shepherd Leads W. Md. To Victory

WESTMINSTER, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Bill Shepherd, Western Maryland's all-American candidate, led the Green Terrors to a 26-0 victory over Mount St. Mary's today with a burst of scoring that gave him the national leadership.

Shepherd, a human battering ram that tore the Mounts' line to shreds, scored three touchdowns and converted 2 points-after for 20 points. His performance gave him a total of 120 points, and enabled him to top Art Strutt, of Duquesne, who led until today with 108 points.

Western Maryland's scoring was confined to the first half, when the regular eleven romped over its game but weak opponent. Coach Dick Harlow used reserves throughout the second half and they held the Saints on even terms.

Fumble Kick-off.

Schwieker scored the first touchdown soon after the opening kick-off, which Mount St. Mary's fumbled and an alert Terror end recovered. Shepherd then led two long marches from midfield for as many touchdowns, and carried the ball over for his third marker following an exchange of kicks.

The Emmittsburg team never seriously threatened the Terror goal-line, and was backed up in its own territory throughout most of the final period.

Duke-Carolina State Game Is Postponed

Durham, N. C., Nov. 29 (AP).—The Duke-North Carolina State football game scheduled for Duke Stadium this afternoon was postponed until Saturday because of 36 hours of rain, which left the field unfit for play.

Announcement of the decision to postpone the game was made by the Duke athletic officials this morning.

Greenbrier Scores Upset.

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Greenbrier Military School defeated a highly favored Charleston High team, 12 to 6, to end the season undefeated. Ellis and Ghiz scored for Greenbrier, Audia for Charleston. Greenbrier registered 12 first downs to six.

Virginia Tech Trims V. M. I. By 13-0

Each Team Makes but Two First Downs; Smith, Dickerson Score.

ROANOKE, Va., Nov. 29 (AP). Virginia Tech had the punch when it was needed today and struck effectively in the second and third periods to defeat Virginia Military Institute, 13 to 0, in ankle-deep mud.

A Thanksgiving Day crowd of 10,000 persons braved the rain and the mud to see "Foots" Dickerson and George Smith put over the winning points in the thirty-second annual "military classic of the South."

Tech made just two first downs, but they were followed by touchdowns. The remainder of the game consisted largely of ineffective attempts by both teams to make their running attack click on the soggy field. V. M. I. resorted to an aerial attack in the final quarter, but the Cadet tossers could not get the range with the slippery ball and twice Duncan Holsclaw intercepted heaves intended for Cadet ends.

Net Gain of 72 Yards.

Tech had a net gain of 72 yards from rushing while V. M. I. backs had a net gain of 11. Each team made two first downs. Tech tried one pass and it failed, while V. M. I. completed three out of 12 for a net gain of seven yards.

Penn, substitute Cadet back, fumbled in the second quarter as the Cadets took the pigskin on the 20-yard strike, and Dodged leaped on the ball for Tech, on the Cadet 16. A reverse, Holsclaw to Smith, netted a yard and Holsclaw, on a fake, shot through the line to the 9-yard stripe. Dickerson was dropped without gain on a plunge into center, but Smith on another reverse from Holsclaw made it first down on the Cadet 4. Dickerson plowed through the line for a touchdown. Jones kicked a perfect placement for the extra point.

Clark's Kick Blocked.

After McMillan ran back a punt to his own 40, Holsclaw broke through and downed Clark for a 10-yard loss on a wide right end run. Banks blocked Clark's kick and Dodge fell on it for Tech on the Cadet 23.

Lane Conquers Danville Team

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Lane High School defeated George Washington High, of Danville, here this morning, 9-0, to end its season undefeated in the class A division.

The game was played in a sea of mud and a drizzling rain and was hard fought throughout. Lane scored a safety in the second period when Martin blocked a punt, and registered the Lane touchdown of the contest in the third quarter. Soon after the kick-off Payne circled left end for 25 yards and a moment later Bobby Deane broke through tackle and, with Payne leading the interference, raced 30 yards to score standing.

Lane excelled in every department, and registered 10 first downs to 5 for Danville.

Navy Gridmen, Off for Clash With Army, Given Greatest Send-off in History

Tricky Plays Rehearsed In Rain

Middies May Hold Brief Drill This Afternoon in Philadelphia.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Amid the din of songs and cheers, the Naval Academy football team departed tonight for Philadelphia, where on Saturday it will do battle in the traditional game with the rival West Point Cadets.

It was a send-off the like of which has never been equaled in gridiron annals of the naval school.

The ceremonials were broadcast over a national radio hook-up. Several hundred residents of the naval reservation and Annapolis stood on the damp campus in a fog that gathered in the wake of a steady downpour of rain.

May Hold Short Drill.

The demonstration continued until the buses bearing the players passed out of the academy inclosure en route to West Street Station and their special train. Tonight the warriors were quartered at the Manufacturers Country Club, at Oakland, which will be their headquarters until just before game time, although a short practice session may be held on Franklin Field tomorrow afternoon.

The final practice on Thompson Field was held in a field of mud, with rain falling all the while. It was a brief rehearsal of the bag of tricks and general formations. More extensive work was out of the question because of conditions under foot.

Lieut. Tom Hamilton, head coach, pronounced his charges in the very best of condition. "I expect my boys to win, they are fit and capable to fulfill this expectation," he said.

In Good Condition.

As far as physical fitness is concerned, Buzz Borries, back field ace, and his pals certainly appeared in the pink. The "Buzzer" in particular, never looked better. There have been times during the season when he was a completely worn out player, carrying as he did the brunt of Navy's attack.

Seven of the Middies who will start against the Cadets will be playing in their last game. They are Capt. Dick Burns, guard; Dornin and Mandelkorn, ends; Cutter and Lambert, tackles, and Borries, and Clark, backs. In addition, a dozen others of the main squad will be lost by graduation next June.

Army Ends Practice, Leaves for Scene

Three plebe teams demonstrated Navy formations as the first, second and third varsity combinations looked on. After three days of rain the field was so chewed up that the coaches kept shifting their scrimmage line so that practically every foot of ground on the plains area had been traversed.

Richmond Beats William and Mary

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—The University of Richmond today handed William and Mary a 6-to-0 licking without allowing the Indians a single touchdown threat in the forty-sixth renewal of their ancient Thanksgiving Day rivalry.

Fourteen thousand fans sat through a drenching rain to watch the Spiders wind up one of the most successul seasons in their history. The game was played on a field two inches deep with slimy mud.

Perry Schsiz paved the way for the triumph with a 42-yard punt return in the third period. He was tackled by Walter Zable on the 2-yard line. Two plays later Roger Leverton smashed over left tackle for the score. Leverton missed the extra point from placement.

Bears Win Thriller From Detroit, 19-6

Gene Ronzani in the end zone for a touchdown after a long pass by the same combination had put the Bears in scoring position. The home club again took the lead a few minutes later when Presnell booted a field goal from the 42-yard line, and then added its second touchdown when Gutowsky smashed over a touchdown to climax a march which began on the Lion 35.

Trailing by nine points as the third period opened, the Bears called on Manders. The former Gopher booted one from the 21 and another from the 42.

The Bears stopped a desperate Detroit running game in the final minutes after the Lions had rushed and passed from their own 20 to the Bears' 14. Two running plays were smothered, two passes failed and the Bears took the ball moments before the final gun.

The Lions made 14 first downs to the Bears' 6 and outrushed the visitors 201 yards to 116.

Rains Postpone Alexandria Grid Game

Delayed Until Tomorrow; Fraters Are Seeking Sunday Contest.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). — Alexandria High's home-coming game with Gonzaga was postponed today because of the heavy rains that turned Baggett's Field into a sea of mud.

Gonzaga and Alexandria will clash at 2:30 p. m. Saturday. The day and time was agreed upon this morning at a conference between officials of the two institutions.

Manager Gunny Davis of the Fraters is seeking a game for Sunday to be played at Baggett's. Any unlimited or semi-pro eleven interested, call Alexandria 7 between 9 a. m. and 12 noon.

Coach Fleming will issue a call for candidates immediately after the Thanksgiving holiday. Veterans to return include Al Wilson, Burke, Duvall, Dilliard, Watson and Rogerson.

Benny Birrle and John (Knappy) Nugent are the only players back from last year's varsity five. Reds McMenniman, Frank Brewer, Paul Shu and Eddie Hammersley are expected to put up stiff fights for berths. Bentley Apperson, a guard, who saw considerable action last season, is conceded a chance of making the regular team.

Star Temple Back Meets Waterloo

ter Smukler batted uselessly against unyielding flesh. The sum total of Smukler's advances against this curious but apparently impregnable defense was 44 yards in 17 tries; and his longest gain was 5 yards. However, he handled the ball for practically every play, feeding it to the eventual carrier on reverses, he blocked ably, he threw some accurate and successful passes and he did relieve himself of one quick kick from the line of scrimmage that traveled all of 65 yards.

Line Makes Holes.

Bucknell came to Philadelphia with no heroes and no candidates for a pat on the back from the football gods, and so they had parites by the name of Smith and Reznichak and particularly Miller, who ran for 10 and 15 yards at a clip and looked like the kind of football players that Smukler probably was. But in truth, these Bucknell backs had large holes through which to zig-zag, holes left by the violent intrusion of the hefty persons of the Bucknell line. When a Bucknell lineman had charged through the Temple forwards, the space left by the passage of his figure left room for three backs to run through tandem. But, alas, this was only up to about Temple's 30-yard line. Once Temple advanced from its 10-yard line to past midfield in 5 successive first downs and then bogged down.

Smukler may be an All-American, but I can not make any sincere promises on that. Old Pop may have here a great and undefeated football club, but it was just another team out here this afternoon, getting a good pushing around. It could not have been the slippery ground because it was just as SLICKERY for Bucknell, though I will admit that the Warner system suffers more from insecure footing. I wish that Smukler had shone brilliantly. He would have probably, had the experts stayed away.

Richmond Team Downs William and Mary, 6-0

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (U.P.).—Richmond Spiders floundered to a 6-to-0 victory over William and Mary before 14,000 football fans here today, while a persistent drizzle added to the hazard of a muddy field.

Shultz, of Richmond, returned a W. and M. punt 42 yards to the 2-yard line in the third period. Leverton scored on the next play.

Virginia Crushed By Carolina, 25-6

bucked the line to the 5 and Jackson ploughed through the line for the second N. C. touchdown. Tatem dropped back as if to boot for the extra point, but instead Hutchins sneaked through for the extra point.

Lateral Nets Score.

The next Carolina scoring drive began on Virginia's 45-yard line. Hutchins slithered through to the 22, where he was downed by Tucker. Jackson lunged through the line to the 10 for a first down and on the next play Hutchins slipped a lateral to Montgomery who galloped around Virginia's right end for the third Carolina touchdown.

The second quarter opened with the ball in Virginia's possession on its own 3-yard line. The Cavaliers kicked to Jackson, who was downed on the Virginia 35-yard line—and then began the real battle. The Virginia line bounced Tarheel players off right and left to gain the ball on downs. The Virginia players marched into enemy territory to the 20-yard line, where Carolina fell heir to the ball on downs. The final play of the half found Carolina being stopped on the line of scrimmage.

Johnson Goes Over.

Virginia brought its brand of inspired football into being in the third quarter as Johnson intercepted a pass and was dropped on Carolina's 20-yard line. Bit by bit Johnson single handed worked the ball to the 1-yard line and was accorded the honor of being allowed to nudge it over for the lone Virginia score.

Later in the quarter, the Cavaliers awakened. Jackson snapped a nice pass from Virginia's 46 to Buck on his own 45. Down the field galloped Buck for the final North Carolina touchdown.

Both teams battled furiously, but ineffectually, throughout the fourth quarter, which was scoreless.

Navy B Gridders Beat Panthers

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Playing in a driving rain most of the while, the Naval Academy "B" squad gridders rang up a decisive victory over the "B" squad of University of Pittsburgh in their annual Thanksgiving Day game here today, 18 to 7. The contest marked the close of the local season as far as collegiate engagements are concerned.

The Middies shock troops displayed a smooth and diversified attack and cohesion of play that was too much for the Pittsburghers to master, just as the Panther varsity eleven did when it rolled up a score of 31 to 7 against the Navy regulars less than two weeks ago, so the Tars feel they gained some measure of consolation from today's triumph.

Hopkins Bows To Maryland In Mud

fireworks. The Terrapins marched relentlessly down to the Blue Jays' 2-yard line, but Crecca fumbled the slippery pigskin there, and Bishop, of Hopkins, recovered on the 4-yard line.

After McLean had kicked to Widmyer on the Maryland 42, the Old Liners opened up again, passing and driving to the Hopkins 4-yard stripe, where on fourth down Crecca stabbed through center for the touchdown. Widmyer kicked the extra point.

Crecca had a chance to pick up another 6-pointer a few minutes later. He shot around right end for a 25 yards, and was almost in the clear when his feet tangled in the mud and he skidded to a halt on the Hopkins 42.

From this point Widmyer got hold of the ball, shook off six tacklers and raced 20 yards to the Hopkins 22. A series of passes brought the ball to the Hopkins 3, and on fourth down, with a second to go before the half, Nelson hit center, but missed making the touchdown by a scant foot.

Hopkins braced in the third quarter, and held the Marylanders scoreless, despite the injection of Stonebraker into the line-up.

Stonebraker, however, cut loose in the fourth quarter. Together with Crecca and Hedley, he helped escort the ball from the Blue Jays' 42 to the 17, where, aided by excellent interference, he whirled and sidestepped in his characteristic swivelhipped fashion, to shake off tackler after tackler and cross the goal line for the final score. It was the most exciting run of the game. Buscher attempted to convert the extra point with a run around end, but failed.

Sothoron Makes Long Gain.

He promptly reeled off a 30-yard run, but the play was called back, Maryland being off-side. Just before the final whistle Sothoron ran from his own 34-yard to the Blue Jays' 40 after slashing off tackle.

The game, the thirty-third meeting of the time-honored rivals, was rather drab and colorless, with only 1,500 in the stands. It poured throughout the game, adding to the woes of players and spectators alike. This game probably was the last between the two teams.

Hopkins' lone first down came by reason of a 22-yard run by Pete Reynolds, star of the local boys, late in the first quarter. He managed to elude a couple of rain-soaked and weary Maryland sentinels, planting the ball on the Maryland 42. And, this, by the way, was the closest Hopkins ever came in the Terrapins' territory.

Hagen Wants To Retire From Cup Team

Ryder Cup Team Captain Says He Is Tired of Honor.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 29 (AP).—Since the Ryder Cup first was placed in competition nearly ten years ago, Walter Hagen has been closely related to that gold golf trophy, but now the old maestro of the mashie and the midiron wants to step aside as playing captain of America's team.

Hagen hitched his gray flannel knickers over his not so slender frame, slid forward in his chair at a hotel here, lit a cigarette and reminisced about the four Ryder Cup competitions by teams representing the greatest of American and British professionals.

Now with the British coming over here this summer for a defense of the mug, Hagen would rather not be the playing captain of the American forces.

"I've been the American captain since it all started and I believe it is time to step aside and give some of the other boys a chance at the honor for the good of golf," he said.

"But," Hagen said, "if the boys should insist on me continuing as captain I would not play. On the other hand, if they name me as one of the players, I wouldn't be captain. I soon will submit my resignation with these conditions."

The Haig leaves here soon for the Miami-Biltmore open and then will motor to the West Coast to meet the boys returning from Australia.

Southeast Teams Win at Hockey

First and Second Clubs in Form at Newtonville.

Newtonville, Mass., Nov. 29.—The two Southeast teams bore their colors undefeated through the second day of the National Field Hockey tournament here. Southeast first team defeated Northeast first, 1-0, in the closest match ever played between the rival teams, a match that tore 1,500 people away from their respective turkeys to cheer deliriously on the side lines.

Southeast Reserves won by 5-0 over Great Lakes, with a rearranged line-up that brought Janny Turnbull, of Washington, into play center half, and then right half, and placed Betty Cogswell and Judy Belknap, both of Baltimore, in center half and right wing posts during the second half of the match. The third match of the day was won by Northeast Reserves over Mid-West, 9-2.

Technical polish and decisive play were shown so incessantly on both sides in the Southeast-Northeast match, that the selection committee, which is choosing all-American and American Reserve teams for announcement at the banquet tomorrow night, were embarrassed.

Chambersburg, Pa., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Chambersburg High School closed its most successful season in history here this afternoon, running roughshod over Shippensburg High School, 18 to 0. It was the eighth win for Chambersburg in nine starts.

Howell again streaked around end in the fourth quarter for a 23-yard gain, placing the ball in scoring position. Bryant, on an end run got 13. Howell slanted across tackle, shook off two Vanderbilt forwards and ran 15 for a touchdown. Smith converted.

Coach Thomas sent in a new team, composed of second and third string men. The Commodores were able to battle on even quarters for the remainder of the game.

Alabama piled up a total of 18 first downs to 3 for Vanderbilt, and 400 yards on runs and passes from scrimmage to 49 for the Commodores.

to the wire and the judges called it Dust Girl by a nose, but for betting purposes it was the Shandon entry, one and two. Despite the fact that the entry paid an across-the-board mutuel of $16.90, $14.60, $9.70, the combination was well played by the small-money betters and the pine trees along the backstretch fairly shook under the shouts of the faithful.

Eal Parr, the Worthington Valley sportsman, watched his Star Porter make a show of the field of five that contested in the running of the Henry Harford Handicap. It was the day's secondary feature race and the only sprint on the program. Star Porter, son of The Porter, won by six lengths from Pompeius which, in turn, had a length the best of the tiring Happy Go. Indian Runner and Burning Blaze were the others in the field.

Star Porter Wins.

Johnny Bejshak, a veteran rider with a lot of pep, had the mount and he left nothing to be desired in the way he handled Star Porter. He kept the gelding head-and-head with Happy Go until the latter gave up and then went on to win headily. Pompeius gained some ground in the closing stages, but was no match for the Parr-owned horse.

Star Porter, trained by Elmer Trueman, of Washington, was a popular bet and the public choice at a $5.30 mutuel.

Church Call, a daughter of Peanuts, won the day's opener in a driving finish which saw Queen Vic beaten in the closing sixteenth. Kissin Bug was third in the field of 12. The last named was the lukewarm favorite. The winner paid an $11 mutuel.

Tuffy G. Is Winner.

Tuffy G., favorite at almost 3 to 1, scored a nose victory in the second race after a brilliant ride by Jockey Haines. The Hanna color bearer barely defeated Tiempo. Three lengths away came Pencader to take the show money. Scotch Soldier and Tiempo skidded along in front of the field while Tuffy G. was running next to last. Tuffy began to move up on the swing for the stretch, and gained rapidly throughout the closing stages to collar Tiempo in the closing furlong.

Worthington, an old campaigner owned by Miss Rhoda Christmas, of Marlboro, showed a keen liking for the muddy going in the third race and bounced home a length in front of Sound Money. The third horse was Airway, a longshot, which was beaten five lengths for the place money. Jimmy D., with Meade up, was installed the favorite but he was a poor ninth at the wire. Worthington paid $12.80.

Band Wagon, $7.40, was much the best of the platers in the sixth event. Lee Fallon had the colt winging out in front almost from the break and the combination clicked by five lengths. Miss Careful was an easy second over Miss Snow.

The final event, 1½ miles, went to Garden Message, paying $8.80. Steelhead finished second a length back, while Carabinier 2d was third a head behind.

7-to-1 Winner of Thanksgiving Day Handicap in Bowie Mud

Downs Feature Won by All Forlorn

Beats My Dandy by Half Length; Pelican Takes Show Money.

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 29 (AP).—All Forlorn, Mrs. M. J. White's 4-year-old filly, won the $1,500 Thanksgiving Day Handicap at Epsom Downs today. The time for the three-quarters was 1:18 1-5.

The brilliant All Forlorn was a half length in front of My Dandy, another favorite, as she flashed under the wire. The Pelican, which finished strong, took the show end of the purse from Wise Anne.

Nicky Wall gave All Forlorn a smart ride, and the filly showed no inclination to quit despite the muddy going. The race drew the heaviest mutuels play since opening day, a total of $22,135 being bet.

All Forlorn returned $7.50 to win, $5 to place and $3.50 to show.

Whelan and Jankowski Added To All-Stars for 'Bama Game

TWO valuable additions to the Washington All-Star roster were announced yesterday by Jim Pixlee, coach of the team. The newcomers are Tom Whelan and Johnny Jankowski, two of the cleverest backs developed at Catholic University during Coach Dutch Bergman's regime.

Whelan and Jankowski join Johnny Simpson, Maryland; "Tex" Gamblin, Gallaudet, and Leo Roskowski, Ohio State, all linemen, whose nominations for the team were announced earlier in the week. The complete roster will be announced Sunday.

Whelan, who attracted more publicity than any other C. U. player in recent years, was named on several all-American teams and placed on the third Associated Press roll of honor. He is fast and shifty. Broken-field running is his strong suit, and once in the open he'll lead the 'Bama boys a merry chase.

Tommy played pro football for a time with the Pittsburgh eleven, but quit the sport to accept a coaching position in New York. Jankowski has been playing with the Washington Nationals.

Alabama, which is now drilling under Hank Crispi's direction, is slated to arrive in Washington next Thursday morning. A public workout will be held in the afternoon at Griffith Stadium. Friday, however, the squad will rehearse in private.

Today is the last opportunity fans have of obtaining tickets for the game at $1.10. This price also includes the box seats. Beginning tomorrow the prices advance to $1.65 for all. The pasteboards are obtainable at the ball park and Spalding's. Proceeds will be turned over to Almas Temple.

Japs on Grid

American Football Makes Debut With Much Pomp.

TOKYO, Nov. 29 (AP).—American football was introduced to Japan today in a Thanksgiving Day game, which saw an aggregation of Japanese collegians win 26 to 0 from an American club.

Prince Chichibu of the royal house was among the interested spectators.

Most of the Japanese who poured into Meiji Shrine Stadium were somewhat puzzled by the play, although they readily got the idea that their countrymen were winning.

The lighter and younger Japanese eleven drawn from Meiji, Waseda and Rikkyo Universities outspeeded the American residents from the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club. Most of the university players were American born.

Almost the entire American colonies of Yokohama and Tokyo, headed by Ambassador Joseph C. Grew and his wife, were on hand.

Campbell Named Racing Handicapper

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—John B. (Jack) Campbell has been named racing secretary and handicapper for all five of New York's tracks for 1935.

The appointment, announced by the presidents of the Saratoga, Belmont Park, Aqueduct, Empire City and Jamaica Racing Associations, set a precedent in American racing, for Campbell thus will have almost complete control over the tracks of the entire State.

Ekky Entered In Santa Anita Stakes

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 29 (AP).—Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney posted $100 nominating money with the Los Angeles Turf Club today as his answer to the question of whether Equipoise would use the $100,000 Santa Anita handicap here as a possible stepping stone toward the title as the world's leading money winner.

The nomination of the great thoroughbred for the February 23 classic came three days ahead of the closing date for nominations for the race that is expected to attract Gallant Sir, Cavalcade and a host of other great runners.

There was some question after Equipoise won the Whitney Gold Trophy event in the East recently, whether he would be able to go ahead on tentative plans to race here, but Whitney's money on the line today further served to quiet reports that the big horse was suffering from injuries.

A victory here would send Equipoise well out in front of Sun Beau as the world's ranking money maker. He has earned $338,450 to date as compared with the total of $376,744 amassed by Sun Beau.

A foreign touch was added to the event when Statesman, 4-year-old son of one of Europe's leading sires, was nominated by Victor Emanual, London sportsman. Eight other horses besides the Whitney thoroughbred were nominated today.

Haskell Losers.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 29 (AP).—Xavier University's Musketeers came from behind to crush the Haskell Indians, 38 to 6, today after Haskell took a one-touchdown lead in the first period.

Grid Fans' Last Votes for Rose Bowl Game.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 29 (AP).—Impossible though it appears, Southern California football fans would like to see Minnesota play Stanford in the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena New Year's Day.

In a vote taken by Los Angeles newspapers, the Gophers were given a large majority over all other prospective opponents for Stanford.

The Big Ten champions, who are unable to take part in any post-season games because of conference rulings, received 907 votes. Alabama, the team generally expected to get the Rose Bowl bid, was second with 701, and Colgate third with 669.

Other teams, chosen in the order mentioned, were Pittsburgh, Navy, Army, Columbia, Temple, Rice, Ohio State and Louisiana State.

Americans Defeat Nippon All-Stars, 23-5

Omiya, Japan, Nov. 29 (AP).—America's barnstorming baseball players knocked out ten home runs to drub the Nippon All-Stars, 23 to 5, here today.

Charley Gehringer led the home run parade with three. Babe Ruth smacked out two, Earl Whitehill two and Lou Gehrig, Jimmy Foxx and Mintner Hayes one apiece. The score:

Americans	1 0 0 0 1 1 0 2 0 x—23	23	2

Tilden, Barnes Triumph.

Paris, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—Big Bill Tilden and Bruce Barnes, of the United States, today defeated Martin Plaa, of France, and Albert Burke, of Ireland, in a doubles match of the French Professional Tennis tournament. The score was 4—6, 6—2, 2—6, 6—4, 6—0. This turned the tables on Burke and Plaa, who had beaten Tilden and Barnes, respectively, in single matches yesterday.

$8,100 Buys Lord Jim at Auction

Hambletonian Winner Is Sold to Owner of Walnut Hall Farm.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29 (AP).—Lord Jim, owned by E. L. Wefford, of Columbus, Ohio, and winner of the Hambletonian, today was sold to Dr. Ogden M. Edwards' Walnut Hall Farm of Donerail, Ky., for $8,100 as the Old Glory auction of trotters and pacers came to a close.

Although failing to bring the high bid expected, the 3-year old son of Guy Axworthy which passed through the sale two years ago as a member of the Walnut Hall consignment for $575, brought the highest price of the sale. He will join the famous breeding farm headed by such great sires as Peter Volo, Protector and Volomite.

Following Lord Jim into the ring, Emily Stokes, victor in the Matron and National Stakes this year, for C. E. Phellis, of New York City, went to an Italian buyer for $5,500 with W. J. Rosemire, of Lexington, doing the bidding.

Two-dollar mutuels paid CHURCH CALL, $11.00, $5.30, $3.60; QUEEN VIC, $4.30; KISSINBUG, $3.00.

CHURCH CALL, rated forwardly after reaching the back stretch, responded nicely when straightened into the home stretch, then came strongly to get up approaching the finish. QUEEN VIC followed close to the leaders from the beginning and came courageously in the closing drive. KISSINBUG, abreast of PHYLLIS C for the first six furlongs took command under strong pressure at the final curve, swung wide thereafter then tired. CANIMAR bettered his position steadily in the last half mile. LANGUOROUS slow to get going, was unable to threaten when hard ridden. ADO had speed for six furlongs. THE AENEAD was never a factor. PHYLLIS C stopped badly after being overtaken.

SECOND RACE—One and three-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600. For 3-year-olds and upward; claiming. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 1:44. Off at 1:48. Winner, G. Hanna's b. g. (5) by Messenger—Declasse. Trained by L. A. Bruase. Value to winner, $435; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $15. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:51, 1:17 2-5, 1:45, 2:06.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TUFFY G., $7.70, $4.30, $2.80; TIEMPO, $5.40, $3.00; PENCADER, $3.50.

TUFFY G., permitted to settle in his stride before moving to his field, reached a forward position when approaching the homestretch, then closed in resolute fashion to get up in the last 50 yards. TIEMPO, under slight restraint while following in close attendance of SCOTCH SOLDIER, gained the lead when straightened into the homestretch, then held on gamely when challenged. PENCADER held a prominent position during the early running, but could not menace when the real test came. SCOTCH SOLDIER was rushed hard to take the lead at the first turn; was steadied, but failed to rally when placed to a drive. CANDLE FLY was held safe. PRUMPER was never a factor. IRISH VOTE stopped.

Thanksgiving Signals Start Of Yule Trade

By Karl Von Lewinski.

The passing of Thanksgiving brings the official inauguration of the Christmas shopping season, coincident with the announcement by the larger stores that their toy and gift departments are now open.

Unusually heavy preseason sales have been reported in the weekly survey compiled by Dun & Bradstreetfi Inc., which places retail sales 18 to 25 per cent above the figures of a year ago in most sections.

The poorest showing was made by the lines catering exclusively to the working class trade and was said to be due to the low level of industrial activity.

Comparatively few clearance sales and a low percentage of markdowns on seasonal merchandise were said by the review to be widening profit margins.

Savings to Aid Trade.

Distribution of Christmas savings funds in excess of $4,000,000 to Washington residents during the next few days, is expected to furnish initial impetus to Yule purchases here.

Christmas savings clubs over the entire United States will distribute about $370,000,000 in the next ten days, according to Herbert F. Rawll, founder of the Christmas Savings Club plan.

A questionnaire circulated among members of the Christmas Club plan last year ascertained that the money would be used in approximately the following percentages: Christmas purchases, 42 per cent; savings accounts, 25 per cent; taxes, 12 per cent; year end commitments, 8 per cent; mortgage obligations, 5 per cent; insurance payments, 5 per cent; travel, education and charity, 3 per cent.

Loan Redemption Called.

Of interest to local investors is the call by the Republic of Finland, through its fiscal agent, the National City Bank of New York, for redemption on February 1, next, at par, of its 5½ per cent loan, due 1958, outstanding in amount of $13,450,000.

The call is a sequel to Finland's offering last Monday of $10,000,000 serial 4 per cent notes. According to advices received from the agents, Brown Harriman & Co., Edward B. Smith & Co., Lee Higginson Corporation and the First Boston Corporation, more than $5,000,000 of the $8,000,000 bonds offered for sale in this country have already been sold, $2,000,000 of the $10,000,000 notes were retained by the Bank of Finland and will not be offered for sale in this country.

Proceeds of the new issue will be applied to payment of the 5½s as well as toward redemption of the 7 per cent issue which matures 1950.

Reorganization Plan Approved.

Plans for the financial reorganization of the Pierce-Arrow Company and its subsidiary, the Pierce-Arrow Sales Corporation, have been approved by Judge John R. Knight, of the United States District Court of Buffalo.

He ruled that the company and its subsidiary were insolvent at the time a recent petition for financial reorganization was filed. The plan for reorganization was recently proposed by officials of the company.

Studebaker Corporation will announce its new 1935 models on December 4. The new lines will feature independent planar wheel suspension, compound hydraulic brakes and new body styling.

Society's Hunt for Fair Price Yardstick Is Called Fruitless

By Clarence W. Fackler.

New York, Nov. 29.—Like its quest for the fountain of youth, society's search for a "fair" price has been equally long and futile. In the course of history, the formulae for such a price have been as unstable as the industrial institutions themselves. The Medieval Church used guild costs and customary standards of living. Later, European monarchs favored the price which brought the most revenue to their treasuries.

From then on until the opening of the twentieth century, by the "let-industry-alone" formula, the interests of each enterpriser were relied upon to set a fair price. But the antitrust legislation of 1890 changed once again the fair price yardstick in the United States.

Since that time the State has judged fair prices by absence of restraints on trade, and also by costs of service and "what the traffic will bear" when regulating common carriers and public utilities.

Stand of New Deal.

Today, while loath to relinquish these yardsticks, the New Deal Administration is abandoning its recently adopted code formulae for fixing fair prices. But at the same time, it adheres steadfastly to its yardstick of electrical costs as computed by Federally-sponsored and publicly-owned companies. So the cheer, "all is well," which went up from the President's grandstand a few days ago at Tupelo, Miss., would have received universal applause had it not been for protests from the section on the opposite side of the field where sat the security holders in electric power and light companies.

No wailing was heard from the sideline bleachers, occupied by the consumers. In fact, one would not expect them to be at all antagonistic to a plan promising an abundance of cheap electricity. In any event, as far as this consumer-taxpayer group is concerned, excessive rates can arise just as well from the inefficiences of Government management as from excessive dividend payments on the watered stock of private enterprise.

But the security holders (private persons, trust estates, savings banks, and insurance companies) can be counted on to oppose a further extension of the cheaper power activities by the Federal Government on the Colorado, Columbia and St. Lawrence Rivers. To them, the extensive use of public funds to build competitive plants which tend to destroy private investments in public utility companies, not only makes a balanced budget impossible in the near future, but is unconstitutional. Improper cost accounting methods, subsidies, depression prices for new construction, and the opportunity to use improved machinery, they say, can give publicly-owned utility companies an unfair advantage.

Rates of Private Companies.

Rates of private companies, they add, may not be as exorbitant as biased investigations represent them to be.

Of course, it is to security holders ironical that the President's TVA program to increase the social security of the Nation, tends to reduce their own security. But, unless the courts find that the Federal Government is taking their propetry without due process of law, their case has little to support it. The value of their property is determined as much by the changing attitude of government as by their own varying ability to sell their services. The chance that this value may change at any time to their detriment is the risk that they assume as enterprisers.

Nevertheless, it is true that costs are as opionative today as in the Middle Ages. For this reason, the cost-yardstick of the private utility companies may be quite as correct as the cost-yardstick which the Government is preparing under its own supervision. Justice is not a matter of costs; but of efficiency and downright honesty. With equal degrees of efficiency and veracity, and the same items of expense to consider, public and private costs of producing electrical energy would surely be identical.

But what soverign has not exclaimed: "My kingdom for a yardstick!"

Government Credits Statement

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau this week made public a combined statement of assets and liabilities of governmental corporations and credit agencies of the United States as of September 30, 1934.

The report issued today shows in the case of agencies financed wholly from Government funds a proprietary interest of the United States as of September 30, 1934, of $3,114,083,015, which is a decrease of $20,758,275 over the proprietary interest shown as of August 31, 1934. In the case of these wholly-owned Government agencies the proprietary interest represents the excess of assets over liabilities exclusive of interagency items.

The Government's proprietary interest in agencies financed partly from Government funds and partly from private funds as of September 30, 1934, was $1,009,832,002, an increase of $6,613,092 over the Government's interest as of August 31, 1934. In the case of these partly-owned Government agencies, the Government's proprietary interest is the excess of assets over liabilities, exclusive of interagency items, less the privately owned interest in the assets.

An accompanying table lists assets and liabilities of the Government agencies as of September 30, 1934, classified as to agencies and as to the character of the obligations.

The following tabulation shows in millions of dollars a comparison of proprietary interest as between September 30, 1934, and August 31, 1934:

Farm Products Turn Mixed Late in Month

(U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of Economics.)

Course of prices on farm products was more than usually mixed and irregular in late November. Wheat declined 1 to 4 cents on foreign market conditions, but corn, oats and barley rose 2 to 4 cents because of short supplies. Feed prices continued recent sharp advance.

Spot cotton sold close to recent steady prices. Wool markets gained in strength and activity. Hides inclined to slightly lower prices. Cattle and lambs advanced at Chicago, while hogs receded a little from recent tops, and dressed pork, beef and veal declined under slack demand.

Prices of choice turkeys and roasting chickens were fully maintained, but lower grades weakened and fowls sold lower. Some standard grades of Western eggs advanced and other grades were fairly steady, but production is increasing. Butter markets recovered well from temporary declines and cheese sold at fairly steady prices. Apples moved higher for some varities in a few markets but generally steady position was unchanged. Cranberries have been advancing this month. Trade in vegetables was slowed down during the mild weather of late November, and slight declines were more numerous than price gains.

Cotton Markets Quiet.

The principal market features tending to sustain prices included the continuation of the holding movement among producers, the small crop this season, a continued rate of mill activity at levels above a year ago, although slightly lower than the recent peak activity, and reports of higher prices for Indian cotton.

Unfavorable conditions included the restricted purchases for the mills, lessened activity in cotton cloth markets, some weakening in gray goods prices and continued light exports, along with declines in prices of some other commodities.

Feed Grains Higher.

Corn markets were strong. Trading was active and prices of cash grain advanced even more than futures at some points. Marketings remained relatively light. Cash corn sold at $1 per bushel at Chicago for the first time since 1930, and bids to arrive were advanced to 85 cents per bushel for new No. 3 mixed and 86 cents for new No. 3 yellow for ten days' shipment. Old crop No. 2 yellow sold in the cash market at 90 to 90½ cents, No. 2 white at $1 and new No. 3 yellow at 88 to 88¾ cents per bushel. Other markets advanced with Chicago. A feature in the domestic market toward the end of the month was increased offerings of foreign corn at seaboard markets at prices well below domestic values.

Oats markets strengthened with corn. Imported oats continued to compete with domestic grain in Central Western markets. Shipments of Argentine oats to the United States since the first of August have totaled nearly 5,000,000 bushels. Barley markets were more active and prices gained sharply as a result of a better inquiry for malting and feed types. Improved crop condition of winter wheat was an important influence in the domestic wheat situation. Domestic cash markets were generally dull, with receipts light and demand only moderate.

Spring wheat markets were rather inactive. Flour demand remained slack and mills were not active buyers. High protein and heavy weight continued to bring substantial premiums while ordinary types were slow sale. Rye markets were barely steady with receipts light and about sufficient for current trade needs.

World Silver Output Declines in October

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—World silver production in October totaled 14,795,000 fine ounces, against 14,974,000 in September and 15,481,000 in August, according to the American Bureau of Metal Statistics.

United States production in October amounted to 2,099,000 ounces, against 1,786,000 in September and 2,087,000 in August. Production in Canada was 1,039,000 ounces, compared with 1,512,000 in September and 1,378,000 in August.

Mexico's output totaled 6,200,000 ounces, against 6,098,000 in September and 6,536,000 in August.

Protective Body Formed For C., I. & L. Ry. Bonds

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Formation of a protective committee for the holders of refunding gold bonds, due July 1, 1947, of the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway, was announced today by Alfred H. Meyers, assistant treasurer of the New York Life Insurance Co.

As chairman of the committee Meyers said it was believed "that the continued uncertainties surrounding the affairs of the C. H. & D. will make a readjustment of the road's financial structure unavoidable."

Canada Wheat Exports Increase During Week

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 29 (AP).—Export clearances of wheat for the week ended November 23, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has reported, amounted to 2,923,429 bushels, an increase of 877,895 bushels over the previous week.

The figure represented a decrease of 1,873,075 bushels from the corresponding week of 1933, when 4,796,504 bushels were exported.

Making of Butter Rises for Season

Production Is 13 Per Cent Heavier Now Than Year Ago.

Chicago, Nov. 29 (AP).—A less than seasonal decline in the manufacture of creamery butter and a contrary to trend sales tonnage increase for October was announced today by the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank in a report on business conditions.

Butter production was 13 per cent heavier than a year ago and 14 per cent higher than the 1924-1933 average for the month, although it was 6 per cent below September. The sales tonnage increased 5½ per cent above September, 12½ per cent over the five-year average, and 14 per cent over October, 1933.

Inventories on November 1 were 14,014,000 pounds above the five-year average for that date, but 49,430,000 pounds less than November 1, 1933. Prices advanced in October.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Primary producers of copper have voted to extend the waiver of their sales quotas in favor of secondary custom and by-products quotas for a period of two months, beginning December 1, it was announced today. This action, according to copper trade authorities, assures maintenance of the present 9-cent a pound market on domestic shipments of Blue Eagle copper to the end of January.

The Iron Age composite price for steel scrap, after five consecutive weekly advances, remains stationary at $10.33 a gross ton. Composite prices for pig iron and finished steel are unchanged at $17.90 a ton, and 2.124 cents a pound, respectively. No. 1 heavy melting steel scrap is up 50 cents a ton at Pittsburgh, according to advices from that market. The new quotation is $11.50 to $12 a ton.

Stocks of Cuban raw sugar in New York licensed warehouses totaled 29,113 bags as of yesterday, the lowest since 1925 for this season, according to the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. Since the high point of 227,000 tons on August 10, 208,000 tons have moved from warehouse to refineries.

Increased Gold Production and Accumulations From Other Sources Seen Creating Surplus Problem Which May Plague Banking and Credits.

New York, Nov. 29.—The world output of gold during 1934, according to expert estimate, will aggregate some 26,500,000 fine ounces, a new record for all time in the production of the yellow metal. This increase in the annual rate of gold production, coupled with depreciation and devaluation of currencies and the pouring into monetary stocks of large amounts of gold from hoarding and from the arts, has created a surplus gold problem which may well plague the banking and credit systems of the leading nations for many years to come.

The world production of gold has thus risen from 19,585,000 fine ounces in 1929, then valued at $405,000,000, to 26,500,000 ounces valued at $927,000,000 in devalued dollars for the current year. This increase in production, particularly since 1931, is attributable to the rise in the price of gold in relation to other commodity prices and such depreciated currencies as the pound sterling and the dollar. As the price of gold rose in terms of these currencies, its production became more profitable. Not only have prospectors sought to discover new gold fields, but operations have been resumed in many mines that had become unprofitable in the past. The increase in the production of gold has been particularly marked in Canada, in Soviet Russia and in several of the South American countries, notably Chile and Colombia.

The sharp increase in the annual output of gold, however, is relatively a much less important influence than the enormous appreciation in th monetary value of existing stocks of the yellow metal resulting from currency depreciation and devaluation. The monetary gold stocks of the United States have been marked up by more than $3,000,000,000 through legal devaluation of the dollar. The same situation exists in other countries which have permitted their currencies to depreciate. It is not yet apparent, however, because the new gold contents of their currencies has not yet been fixed, and the monetary gold stocks of their central banks and treasuries are still valued at original parities. The Bank of England, for example, reports holding currently £192,000,000 in gold at the old parity of the pound. If this metal were revalued on the basis of the existing gold equivalent of the pound sterling it would be worth £323,000,000.

Furthermore, it is well known that the British exchange equalization account holds £20,000,000 to £30,000,000 of gold. Similarly, large amounts of the yellow metal have been acquired in the London bullion market, to a large extent by Americans, and are being held in the vaults of British financial institutions. Once the pound is legally stabilized, this gold will undoubtedly be sold in the open market and be acquired chiefly by central banks, thereby further increasing the amount of the world's monetary stocks of gold.

The same reasoning holds true of other countries which have depreciated their currencies. If the reported gold holdings of the central banks of the Scandinavian countries were revalued at the present gold equivalent of their currency units, they would be almost doubled.

In addition to this vast potential increase in the value of world gold stocks from currency revaluation, the return to central banks of gold currently hoarded is a factor to be considered. Since the depreciation of the pound in 1931, about $705,000,000, at present parity, of hoarded gold has been exported from India and sold in the London bullion market. It is fair to assume that most of this gold has found its way into the vaults of various central banks. Similarly, since the depreciation of currencies became widespread in the fall of 1931, a considerable amount of gold in the form of coins and old gold formerly used in the arts has been turned over to the central banks or sold in the open market.

These developments have removed whatever basis may ever have existed for the widespread contention of recent years that the world suffered from a shortage of gold. Regardless of whether this alleged shortage really existed, and opinion on this point is divided among economists, certainly we are now confronted with the problem of a gold surplus of a magnitude not witnessed even during the period of rapid development of major new gold fields after 1848 in the United States and after 1898 in South Africa. Furthermore, since commodity prices have not risen to offset the effects of devaluation or depreciation of currencies, the outlook for further expansion of gold production is very favorable. In Soviet Russia and South America, modern machinery for gold production is being installed which should contribute to an even larger output of the yellow metal during the coming year.

Despite Surplus of Gold, Change in Ratio Is Considered.

Despite the huge surplus of gold, consideration is being given in several countries to a lowering of minimum ratio of gold to notes and demand liabilities which central banks are required to maintain. Such a reduction has recently been made by the Bank of Poland, and similar reductions were made previously by several of the central banks in South America. In the United States, our swollen gold stocks are being supplemented by silver purchases under the silver purchase act of 1934, a potential danger of inflation for a number of years to come.

Since gold is accepted as the basis for currency and credit control, the existing unprecedented surplus of the yellow metal constitutes a very serious danger for the future in many other countries as well as in the United States. On the basis of present greatly enlarged stocks of gold, as restated in depreciated currencies, various central banks are in position to permit a vast expansion of currency and bank deposits in their respective countries. The result will be further lowering of interest rates and stimulation of business based on the unhealthy expansion of bank credit and other forms of debt. It will require exceptionally able and courageous management of central banks to avoid this serious danger in the period ahead.

Washington Business Angles

By J. R. Brackett.
(Associated Press.)

A work which is taking the time of a great many Government experts these days is the prosaic but very important matter of more accurate and significant statistics.

Some Government economists go so far as to doubt the accuracy of almost every major statistical device in use, and nearly all agree that few of the figures tell what they appear to tell. But statistics, although they receive comparatively little public attention, are the foundation of almost all governmental and a good many private enterprises. On their accuracy may depend the success or failure of tremendous undertakings.

Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the National Emergency Council, listed this problem as foremost in the NRA. The Government months ago recognized the importance of the matter by organizing the central statistical board. Almost every Government agency is making a special attempt to give its figures accuracy and meaning.

Probably no one knows, for instance, how many people are unemployed, or even employed, and there is no agreement as to just what employment means. Business statistics change in significance almost annually. Car loadings, still given great attention, fail to show the movement of small freight by truck.

Again, an increase shown by statistics in the production of one item may be commented on joyfully, but be meaningless because it merely represents a decline in some other industry. Figures showing great bank reserves may indicate prosperity at one time, depression at another.

Bank of England.

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes (in pounds): Total reserve decreased 2,797,000; circulation increased 2,782,000; bullion decreased 15,000; other securities decreased 1,394,000; public deposits increased 2,355,000; other deposits decreased 6,303,000; notes reserve decreased 2,782,000; Government securities increased 270,000.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability is 47.10 per cent, compared with 47.69 last week.

Industry Gains Volume Is Led By Textile Mills

Activity Rises in October to 73 Per Cent of 1923-25 Period.

Volume of industrial production and factory employment, according to the Federal Reserve Bulletin, which shows little change at this season, increased in October, reflecting chiefly the resumption of activity at textile mills.

Activity at industrial establishments, as measured by the board's seasonally adjusted index, showed an increase from 71 per cent of the 1923-1925 average in September to 73 per cent in October.

Steel Output Gains.

Among the industries producing durable manufactures, output at steel mills increased from 23 per cent of capacity for the month of September to 25 per cent for October, while output of automobiles and lumber declined.

In November activity at steel mills continued to increase and in the week ended November 24 was at about 28 per cent of capacity. Automobile production has declined further in connection with the preparation of new models.

The production of nondurable manufactures in the aggregate showed a considerable growth in October, reflecting sharp increases at cotton, woolen and silk mills, offset in part by a decline in activity at meat-packing establishments.

Textile Mills Output.

The increase in output at textile mills after the strike in September brought output to a higher level than in August. Among the minerals, daily output of crude petroleum declined in October and that of anthracite increased by an amount smaller than is usual at this season.

Factory employment and pay rolls in the country as a whole increased considerably between the middle of September and the middle of October. Sharp increases were reported at mills producing textile fabrics, while in the automobile, shoe, and canning industries there were declines of a seasonal nature.

The value of construction contracts awarded was somewhat larger in October than in any other recent month. There was an increase in residential work as well as in publicly financed projects.

Spreckels Sugar Group Hearing Set for Dec. 10

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Federal Judge John C. Knox this week gave creditors and stockholders of the Spreckels Sugar Corporation until December 10 to agree on a plan for reorganization of the company.

If no plan is accepted by that date, Judge Knox said he would consider motions for extending the period or an order dismissing the reorganization proceedings.

Commodity Prices.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—The weekly compilation of wholesale quotations by Dun & Bradstreet shows 25 advances and 20 declines. In the previous week there were 30 advances and 25 declines.

Business Notes

Compiled By G. L. HERRMANN

"During the first half of November sales of the reporting department stores in the metropolitan area of New York were 8 per cent higher than in the corresponding period of a year ago, and excluding liquor sales from this year's figures the increase amounted to almost 6 per cent. The reports indicate about the usual seasonal expansion from October to November," the Reserve Agent announces.

A marked decline in the seasonally adjusted farm income from crops between September and October was attributed Tuesday by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to the AAA's program for crop curtailment during 1934.

The international wheat conference decided that the next conference shall be held in London on March 5, 1935.

Secretary of Interior Ickes Wednesday made public an Executive order by President Roosevelt withdrawing all unreserved and unappropriated public lands in 12 Western States from settlement. The lands withdrawn are to be classified under the terms of the Taylor grazing law, which has as its purpose the orderly use and development of these lands.

Public Works Administration Wednesday announced an additional advance of $3,200,000 to the port authority of New York for continuation of work on the midtown Hudson tunnel. The payment is to be made within the next few days through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

New Process Gets Cellulose From Bagasse

Recovery Cost Is Placed at $8.55 Per Ton in Hawaii.

Recovery of cellulose, the basic substance in textiles, artificial silk, paper, linoleum, cork, high explosives, films and lacquers, from Hawaiian bagasse, bone-dry refuse left after pressing juice out of sugar cane, at a cost of less than $10 a ton by a new nitric acid process is announced by Dr. John H. Payne of the University of Hawaii in a report to the American Chemical Society.

Conversion into cellulose of the 1,000,000 tons of bagasse collected in Hawaii every year is of great economic importance to the United States as well as to Hawaii, according to Dr. Payne.

Industry, it is pointed out, is always seeking new sources of this substance, which, like iron and steel, is indispensable to modern civilization. The enormous expansion in uses of paper is one example of the increased demand for cellulose.

Now Burned as Fuel.

The bagasse, now burned as fuel in Hawaii, under the new process, is treated with a 2 per cent solution of nitric acid for one hour at a temperature of 90 to 100 degrees centigrade.

After draining and washing, it is boiled 45 minutes with 2 per cent caustic soda, then bleached and digested for 30 minutes more in 5 per cent caustic soda.

The percentage composition of the resulting pulp is alphacellulose, 93 to 96; pulp recovery, 32 to 33; soda-soluble, 6 to 8; ash, less than 0.3.

Cost of Process.

The estimated chemical cost of the process, suitable for large-scale production, is $8.55 per ton at current prices, a figure much lower than any other nitric acid pulping procedure.

"Higher yields and better grades of cellulose are obtained by the nitric acid process than by the soda, the sulfate, or the neutral sulfite methods," the report says.

"Owing to the decided advantages of the nitric acid process from the standpoint of equipment, heat, and power consumption, it would be particularly well adapted to conditions obtaining in localities such as Hawaii, where, owing to high transportation rates, fuel is a major item."

SOUND is relative, and even the adage, "silent as a mouse" may be refuted with almost incredible revelations when C. B. S. starts its new "Sounds of Silence" series on December 8 at 7:30 p. m., providing, as someone once said, that things are not what they seem.

In a serious effort to determine which makes the most noise while pursuing its daily round, a fishworm and a goldfish will be pitted against each other in the first broadcast by Dr. E. E. Free, noted scientist and fellow of the Acoustical Society of America, who will settle the question by using a sound microscope on both participants.

Dr. Free's sound microscope magnifies noise 10,000 billion times, and he expects to show in subsequent broadcasts that clamor and noise clank at us at all times though our ears fail to pick them up.

The goldfish, he explains, makes a double noise—a swishing sound while passing through water which the radio audience will hear as loud as rapids, also a sharp, metallic clink, as might be male by a table knife striking against a plate, will be heard when the fish gulps a bubble of air.

The fishworm, under the sound microscope, makes a thunderous racket—a rumbling as of a mighty earthquake, produced by his rubbing against particles of earth.

Other oddities to be heard by listeners will be a weevil inside a grain of wheat, which, when magnified, sounds like a thrashing machine; dust dropping on a table and sounding like thunder, and the murmur inside a beehive roaring like Niagara. Dr. Free turned down a suggestion that he record the sound of an infinitive being split by a publicity man

THE Duke of Kent-Princess Marina wedding, broadcast from London yesterday by short wave to this country during the gray hours of the dawn, proved to be one of the most thrilling events, beautiful for its impressive simplicity, ever heard by this writer.

Details of the procession approaching Westminster Abbey, the enthusiastic crowds, the exciting moment when the princess stepped from her coach to enter the Abbey, and royal cavalcade leaving the church afterward were splendidly handled by the British commentator who painted a perfect word picture of the scene.

Microphones placed within the Abbey brought organ music, the singing of the boy choir, the solemnization of the marriage by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the low voices of the bride and groom.

Though the traditional pomp of British pageantry and ritual were observed, curiously absent from the occasion was any note of sensationalism. It was all dignified, simple and impressive, and the broadcast was so handled. Reception was clear, giving the impression of a network broadcast from New York.

For those who missed the broadcast, due to its early hour—5:44 a. m.—something of its spell will be re-created tonight at 9 o'clock on C. B. S.'s "March of Time."

HERALD OF THE SKIES-
MARK TWAIN
WAS BORN IN THE YEAR OF HALLEY'S COMET AND DIED IN THE YEAR OF HALLEY'S COMET...
He was born Nov. 30, 1835.... 99 years ago today... died Apr. 21, 1910
DRY AIR WEIGHS MORE THAN DAMP AIR!
"THE ALBATROSS - ONE OF THE BEST FLIERS IN THE WORLD - TAKES OFF LIKE AN AIRPLANE...
A MUD HOUSE IS AN ADOBE ABODE....
11-30-34

The year 1835 was marked by an outstanding event in the astronomical world, the appearance of Halley's comet which comes within our range of vison only once in 75 years. That year was also marked by an outstanding event in the history of American literature, for 99 years ago today was the birth of Samuel Clemens who was destined to become the famous author, Mark Twain. And strange as it seems, the same comet that heralded his birth also heralded his death—for in 1910, upon the return of Halley's comet, Mark Twain died.

The great author expected that the comet which appeared at his birth would also appear at his death. A year before his death he said:

"I came in with Halley's comet in 1835. It is coming again next year, and I expect to go out with it. It will be the greatest disappointment of my life if I don't go out with Halley's comet."

He was not to be disappointed, for on April 20, the following year, Halley's comet reached its nearest point to the sun. On April 21 it was on its way outward into unknown space—and on April 21 Mark Twain had started his venture into the unknown.

Water vapor weighs only about two-thirds as much as dry air at the same temperature and pressure. The greater proportion of water vapor in a given volume of air, then, the lighter that volume will weigh.

Confession.

James Jiggson sought a magistrate, in evident distress, and said, "To get my conscience straight I'm anxious to confess. So listen to my rigmarole: 'Way back in '93, while in a reckless mood I stole some apples from a tree. I know not whose those apples were, nor where the orchard stood; I see the whole thing as a blur, my memory's no good. For years thereafter I was prone to view the thing with grins; but now I view it with a groan, it ranks with deadly sins. For now I'm old and any day I'm billed to loop the loops, and what will saints and angels say, if I should join their groups. What can I answer if they ask about that stolen fruit? How can I there in comfort bask, and play my golden flute?" Then said the kindly magistrate, "Forget that musty crime; it's ancient stuff, it's out of date, a thing of mouldered time. But you were wise when you confessed this least of moral slips; it's good to get things off your chest before you cash your chips. A guilty secret is a sore that brings a grievous ache, and it will fester while you snore, and pain you while you wake. You can't be happy or serene, or mingle with the best, if you have pulled off something mean that you have not confessed. Most people wait until they're old, and lame and halt and blind, before the guilty tale is told that festers in the mind. Man waits till life is nearly o'er, with all its ways and walks, then buys a deathbed at the store, and lying on it, talks."

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

ADDED to the confusion of the McKellar-rider-ouster at Internal Revenue is an expose of "intolerable" conditions at the Alcohol Tax Unit, affecting the taxpayers and personnel, by the Internal Revenue Review.

BAKER.

"A heterogeneous mess" is the description given by the current issue to the reorganization of the Alcohol Tax Unit.

"This reorganization, after more than six months, is still in an incomplete state, the Review declares, "to the confusion and restlessness of the taxpayer and every official and employe coming within the jurisdiction of the unit.

"In contrast, the process tax division was organized and regulations completed within a couple of months. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue did not seek a member of the Brain Trust or an efficiency expert. He selected a man who had been chief of his tobacco division, one who had no more comprehension of the process taxes than the man on the street. There were no precedents upon which to fall back upon—nothing by an intricate law.

"Yet," the Review continues, "after numerous conferences with taxpayers affected under such law, regulations were brought forth—not entirely satisfactory, perhaps, but the job was completed, and the taxpayers at least knew what was required of them.

"On the other hand, with volumes of established precedents, the reorganization of the alcohol tax unit . . . has been dragged along."

Nor is this fear and apprehension confined to the taxpayer, the Review points out.

"There is hardly a man or woman at the Alcohol Tax Unit or in the field who is not much concerned over the loss of position, demotion or transfer."

The most disrupted class is said to be that of the storekeeper-gauger. Men of this class—old in the service and young men being brought in without full knowledge of what is required of them—are separated from their homes and families for six months or more, the Review says.

They are required to work 10 hours a day and on Sundays without extra compensation, and in some districts get no vacation as specified under the law, according to the Review, which adds that in some instances the men are told that if they do not like the conditions to "get out."

The officers and collectors of Treasury Local, No. 262, National Federation of Federal Employes, will hold an organization meeting at the Admiral, 1640 Rhode Island avenue northwest, at 6 p. m. Monday, it was announced by J. O. Burnham, president. W. B. Whipple, chairman of the membership committee, will speak on the value of the organization to the Government employes.

Clarence F. Hofstetter, (F), War, has introduced an attachable sear mechanism for guns. In fixed machine guns, mounted on aircraft and adapted to fire between the blades of the propeller, it is customary to employ a trigger motor, synchronized with the motor driving the propeller for actuating the sear of the gun. This invention has provided such a sear mechanism which may be applied to existing types of breech loading locks of guns.
